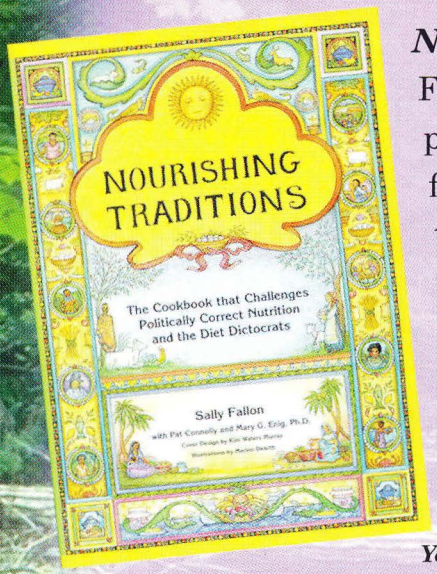
The Cookbook That Challenges Politically Correct Nutrition



Nourishing Traditions, by author Sally Fallon, recalls traditional methods of food preparation and storage. It offers modern families a fascinating guide to wise food choices together with the latest independent and accurate scientific research on foods. Nourishing Traditions contains over 700 delicious recipes that will please the gourmet as well as the busy family.

Did You Know That:

- Your body needs old-fashioned animal fats.
- New-fangled polyunsaturated oils can be bad for you.
- Modern whole grain products contribute to health problems.
- Ancient food preservation techniques actually increase nutrients in many foods.

"We have turned our backs on traditional foods in return for speed and convenience. Fast foods, industrialized foods, packaged foods, fake foods and embalmed foods have caused chronic illness in industrialized nations to reach epic proportions."

– Sally Fallon

A MESSAGE FROM THE MAVERICK PUBLISHER

We publish books of consequence. Books that can change people's lives, the direction of companies or the destiny of nations. But you won't find most of our books on the bookstore shelves, bookstores seldom share our daring. You won't find them reviewed in the Sunday inserts or in The New York Times, but you will find them intriguing and sometimes shocking. I guarantee you that every book we publish will teach you valuable lessons and give you fascinating information; or they will entertain you and your family; or they will make you healthy, wise, and prosperous.

Life can be looked at as a series of interconnected circles. The first is the family, the basis of society. The strength of its connections determines the strength of the nation.

So, if a group of people wants to weaken a nation, it would need to break those connections. There are many ways to do this, and controlling information is one of the most powerful.

In the Goals 2000 educational programs, "Outcome-based Education" stresses the importance of social skills—how to get along with one another. Reading, writing and arithmetic are relegated to lower priority. Yet, if children are trained to please instead of being given the tools necessary to meet life challenges, what kind of a society will America become? How does this weaken the circle?

Since the major corporations own the mainstream media, only approved sound bites are fed to the public about major events. Currently LeRoy Schweitzer is one of the focal points of the U.S. media. So, what is really happening in Montana with his Freemen? How radical are they, and do they have a legal position? Is the federal government doing its proper job?

How many of us know that the U.S. Constitution is a restraint on the federal government? How many people know that the federal government cannot legally operate a law-enforcement organization within the several states of the Union, but only in the territories it administers? How many people know the difference between a Sovereign state and a federal territory? Mr. Schweitzer raises such issues of jurisdiction and proper court procedures, yet how many people are educated enough to understand the difference between the federal government and a common-law, sovereign state of the Union? Society is built of circles within circles. The federal government is one while the several states are a group of others linked together under common law, and, although the circles interact, they have different boundaries and responsibilities. Jurisdiction determines the boundaries and responsibilities.

If the circles have forgotten their boundaries, is it from lack of education or information? Who made us forget; who forgot to tell us; why isn't it in our textbooks? Perceptions magazine is pleased to continually share answers to these questions as we fill in the gaps that keep us apart and bridge the differences so our circles can come together to ensure a future the People will enjoy.

Sincerely,

Gwenn H. Wycoff
Managing Director

When I hear the reactions of some people to our magazine, the old story of the three blind men who attempt to describe an elephant comes to mind. Each of the blind men experiences a different aspect of the elephant and thinks that's what the elephant is. One man feels the trunk and says, "An elephant is like a snake." Another grabs his tail and says, "No, an elephant is like rope." A third holds a thick, rough leg and says, "No, an elephant is like a tree."

Recently a man who's in charge of selecting magazines for a local, politically oriented bookstore told me that he doesn't carry Perceptions because he feels it is too "right wing." My mouth dropped in disbelief as he explained that because we did a story (six months before the mainstream news) about the militia (Winter 1994) he decided we were "racist." I was shocked to realize that he had totally missed the point.

The manager of a gun store (who would probably have loved the militia piece) thought we were a UFO magazine. Some health-food store owners have said that we're too political—missing out on all the empowering healing material and legislation that could very well keep them in business. It's often the same in the metaphysical arena—though, ironically, an awareness of this area is necessary for a practical understanding of much politics (besides its importance in shedding outworn belief systems). Yet, our distribution grew 800 percent in 1995—so we must be doing something right!

When putting our "elephant" together, we strive to bring to light sometimes obscure data that is vital and balanced. From where we sit, we know that much of what TV and mainstream "news" presents is disinformation designed to separate us into hostile camps. Perceptions' unique slant focuses on the many facets of freedom.

A growing number of readers—like yourself—readily appreciate (or have grown to appreciate) each issue's stimulating range of articles. In this issue we introduce the powerful Mondragon cooperative, an economic system achieving great success in Europe; we bring to light shocking facts about microwave ovens as well as our first-ever contest, related to their demise; we break the numbers "code" as we tour the world of pyramids, and we explore revolutions past and present from Ken Kalb's upbeat astrological perspective. We will get to hear more about Dr. Sam Chachoua's breakthrough vaccines from the doctor himself, complete our tour of the world with M.I.T. professor Noam Chomsky and our interview with former NATO officer Robert O. Dean and meet political artist Arthur Szyck. As always, we'll be electrified by Awesome Newsclips, NORML updates, CD and book reviews and many other "tails and trunks."

To each and every one of you, "Thanks for helping us to get this vital material out by sharing us with your family, friends and associates." Because of you we are getting calls, e-mail and letters from people around the world.

Welcome to Perceptions—essential information for pivotal times!

"Wea" culpa

In your "A Sovereign Sampler" is an article by Iain C.L. Poole, "Secret, Veiled and Obscure, The President's Emergency Powers." In it, Mr. Poole quotes the 1973 Senate Report 93-459. Perhaps you or he can clear up a discrepancy for me. I contacted my congressman shortly after reviewing your article. I had him locate a copy of Senate Report 93-459 for me in the Library of Congress. I received a copy of it today. This report, by Mr. Haskell from the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, has absolutely nothing to do with states of emergency and is in fact a habitat report, having to do with eagles' nests in the wilderness.

I would appreciate it very much if you or Mr. Poole can direct me to the senate report he is referring to in his article on the state of national emergency. I assume that he is quoting from actual government sources—however, I have the source he refers to as 93-459 from 1973. I would very much like to see photocopies of the report Mr. Poole has or be directed as to how I may go about securing the report from the government.

Sincerely,

Willy Whitten
El Cajon, California

Our profuse apologies to you and any others we misled with this typo. (Blush!) The number should have read 93-549, and we corrected it in the second edition of the sampler. Your local law library should have the report—all 600 pages of it. —Editor

HAARP

After reading "Monster in the Wilderness" in the Jan/Feb 1996 issue, and not having read the book it's based on [Angels Don't Play This HAARP], I wonder whether other reasons for HAARP's existence are included—such as the possibility that HAARP is designed to mitigate the effects of the so-called "photon belt" (the Manasic M45 Pleiades radiation belt and/or the radioactive belt caused by detonating hydrogen bombs in the space around the Earth). Most of the photon belt information is from channeled sources which need great discernment.

I do not doubt the reported negative effects of HAARP concerning the weaponry and governmental control. Nor do I doubt the reported secrecy or that disinformation is given out. However, could the detrimental environmental effects be minor compared to all on Earth being fried instantly or frozen stiff if one or both of these events occur? Are governments building underground cities as the only way to survive them? Are we being "told" to get ready for Earth changes, when these "Earth changes" are only the tip of the iceberg? Are we being distracted, still, by O.J. hype? What are we supposed to pay attention to?

If more information on HAARP is reported in the book, please include it as most people pick up their information from magazines and other media.

C.R.Daily
Santa Fe, New Mexico

Angels author Jeane Manning replies . . .

C.R. Daily says it for many who are overwhelmed today. We agree that "great discernment" is needed. What can I say? My co-author, Nick Begich, is traveling with his family while Judi asks for a response. So, I'll give my own opinions, except for what Nick often states: "If you're planning to change your life over a piece of information, then make sure that you investigate the sources of the information for yourself. If you can't check it out, then why change your life over it?"

People are saying: This is the breakthrough of the century in human growth and voice development, interlinking the body and brain through vocal design. . . .

"Vocal Bio Matrix is indeed a miracle worker. There have been so many wonderful changes in my life—my learning capabilities have increased to twice the speed, and I retain the information because my memory has substantially improved; my fear patterns have vanished. It's as if you've opened a door in my life that I never knew was closed. You've freed my emotions and have helped me find a whole new world of experience."

Gary DeHart
Imagine Film Entertainment

"I can't explain it. I completely lost my voice for two years. I saw Pavarotti's voice coach, psychiatrists, even hypnotists. Nothing helped. Then my wife heard about Warren. He worked with me & now I can sing better than I ever could.

In Angels Don't Play This HAARP we included more than 350 footnotes so that people can learn where we got the information, look it up and then think for themselves. We don't include speculations about some imaginable uses for HAARP, although we've heard many. The networking of info continues with Nick's newsletter, Perceptions and other venues. I suggest that C.R. order the book. Even if the technical parts take time to digest, overall it's in everyday language.

Yes, the mainstream media usually distract us. The question highlighted is, "What are we supposed to pay attention to?" My personal answer is: Take time for contemplation. Daily. Tune into the answers that come to you when connected to a higher wisdom/love/creativity. These don't leave me feeling fearful. They lighten my step and strengthen the courage to go out and do whatever—or to learn whatever I came here to learn. In the physical world, there are plenty of challenges/tasks. Keep on questioning, reading, thinking and connecting with others for mutual encouragement, fun, laughs—instead of mutual depression. Then decide on some action to take, however small it seems. And don't underestimate the power of the Force!

All the best,

Jeane Manning

Is there a coach class to Citizenship?

After reading the article entitled "Off with Those Plates," by Suzan Zebra (Spring 1994), I wished to ask her or any other individual involved in the "state Citizen Service Center" organization the following question: Has anyone ever encountered a supposed "convicted felon" who has successfully changed their status and had charges dismissed by the court (either State or federal) for either lack of jurisdiction or in the interest of justice?

Secondly, does the "state Citizen Service Center" organization founded by Mr. Richard J. McDonald have a program for individuals who are willing to help spread the word of the differing types of citizenship but unable to spend the necessary monies ($800.00 according to the article) as an upfront fee? Is a payment plan available for those unable to pay the full amount at once?

Glenn Anderson
Ashland, Kentucky state

We know of no convicted felon who has accomplished what you ask, but there's a first time for everything. Mr. McDonald's service centers are free to work out arrangements with their clients as they see fit, and we know of several people who are on payment plans. —Editor

The Kitchen Militia

I have been following the media-hyped concerns over the various growing militia movements across the nation. I must say that the media is once again in Johnny-come-lately mode about accurately covering this movement. The real story is not about the men's patriot movement where a few GI-Joe-style, gun-totin' guys get together once in awhile; the real story is the Kitchen Militia that has been called to arms around this nation since George Bush first acted upon his announcement to become "the education president."

We are thousands of mothers- and grandmothers-cum-researchers located in every state of this country. We have micro-researched every facet of the so-called "restructuring" and in the process have become experts on the United Nations, the U.S.-Soviet education, technology and cultural exchange agreements, federal and state legislation (past and present), philosophy, sociology, psychology and pedagogy. In short, if there is any program or agenda we perceive as a threat to our families, a Kitchen-Militia mother tracks it down and gets the word out on the grapevine; radio call-in shows, fax networks, audio cassette, video tape or any other jungle drum available.

We're not armed with guns; they are so messy! We've got Congressional records, legislation and official documents. We document whatever we say and hoard quotes from air-head politicians like a miser hoards his gold. The media dismisses us as the "Christian Right," although Christians, Jews, Buddhists and atheists are all involved in this relentless research and dissemination. Our numbers include people in government agencies and local school districts.

We are the most dangerous threat to the "restructuring" of this nation. Remember the old slogan, "The hand that rocks the cradle rules the world." This is fair warning. The fastest-growing militant group in this country is the Kitchen Militia. Our numbers swell every time some new piece of socialist garbage is introduced to threaten our families.

Chey Simonton,
National Citizens Alliance,
Mountlake Terrace, Washington

Your efforts are noble and an inspiration, but must you take "pot" shots at the men's movement, even in fun? Theirs is no small, weekend activity, either; some units have more than 10,000 members, and even the ADL estimates the total to be in the tens of millions. Many emphasize education, like MOM (Militia of Montana; pun intended) which offers highly useful videos and other materials. We think they deserve your respect, not friendly fire. After all, they exist to make sure the New World Order doesn't make messes in your kitchens.

On the other hand, perhaps you would like to add a study of M.K. Gandhi to your own curriculum and teach us all how to resist nonviolently. U.S. citizens' situation today is not terribly different from that of Gandhi's people in South Africa and India, and look what he accomplished without firing a shot! —Editor

The only effective relief from fluoridation?

Five times in 1995, I warned the National Nutritional Food Associates in Las Vegas, the Liberty Lobby in Washington, the Cancer Control Society in Pasadena and the 100th anniversary chiropractors convention in Davenport, Iowa, that bureaucrats and the worst elements from the medical establishment had teamed up to influence the California legislature to make fluoridation mandatory. I wrote,

> This legislation has already passed through the California state Assembly by a vote of 48 to 13 and is programmed to sail through the Senate and be signed into law . . . . With your help we plan to put the fluoridation issue on the ballot in California to ban (it) statewide. Not only will this stop the further fluoridation of millions more, it will stop fluoridation in areas already being fluoridated, like San Francisco, Oakland, Beverly Hills and Long Beach.

Other opponents of the bill tried to assure us that it could be stopped by other means. Some said the Senate would never buy it. When it passed there, still others suggested that writing to the governor would suffice, but on October 11, the Los Angeles Times reported, "Governor Pete Wilson has signed a bill to require most California water agencies to add fluoride."

The latest antifluoridation scheme is tort lawsuits, as George Glasser wrote in Perceptions (Jan/Feb 1996). Those suing tobacco companies under tort law can tell you where that got them, however: nowhere. Risk is not enough to prove damages under tort law and will not lead to a suspension of police powers, despite Mr. Glasser's unsubstantiated remarks.

Even when we showed that fluoride is harmful (Bellasai v. Cuyahoga Falls), the U.S. Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals held, in effect, that the state has the police power to add a substance to the public water supply that causes ill health or death without violating the rights of the citizens—even if it is done for no good reason whatsoever.

Therefore the only relief that citizens can obtain is legislative. The overwhelming majority of California legislators are, in my opinion, ignorant of the effects of fluoridation or crooked or both, but Californians can still stop this genocidal practice, since they have retained the right to pass legislation themselves through the initiative. Therefore, we are collecting the 450,000 valid signatures to get the issue onto the ballot as follows:

> Section 4026.7 of the Health and Safety Code is amended to read: "In order to protect the public health from increased risk of hip fracture, cancer, dental fluorosis and other harmful effects which have been linked to fluoride in the scientific literature, no fluoride or fluorine-containing substance may be added to public water systems.
> "All laws to the contrary and Section 4026.8 of the Health and Safety Code and Section 21080.26 of the Public Resources Code, which deal with the implementation of fluoridation are hereby repealed."

I urge you to help us stop fluoridation in California. This is more than a state-level issue; it is the health-rights fight of the century on the biggest battleground in the United States. It affects 30 million Americans' right to decide how to care for their own health.

Scientifically, we have decimated the opposition, but if we let California fall to fluoridation, the rest of the country will follow in three to four years. So, whether you live in California or not, you should help in this fight.

Will the United States Survive Past the Year 2000?

America's New Age Politicians and the Globalist Conspiracy

Investigative Report by Texe Marrs

The Holy Bible prophesies in the last days a global conspiracy of vast, satanic dimensions. Led by a core elite of the super-rich, New Age politicians will come together as one, giving "their power and strength unto the Beast" (Revelation 17). The Beast System of World Government will use free trade economics to enrich the hidden rulers of Planet Earth (Revelation 18). Meanwhile, a Gestapo police state will be set up to institute a reign of terror and insure the loyalty of the global citizenry (Revelation 13). Texe Marrs, author of 35 books, incuding the bestselling Circle of Intrigue, proves that this spectacular time of political and economic evil is now upon us. Virtually every high-ranking politician in the U.S.A.—Republican and Democrat—has willingly allowed themselves to be pliant tools of this horrendous, anti-God conspiracy against our national sovereignty. Based on years of painstaking research, with a solid foundation of irrefutable facts, Will the United States Survive Past the Year 2000? is the one source you need to discover the truth and prepare for the treacherous days ahead.

SHOCKING REVELATIONS OF GROTESQUE PROPORTIONS

House Speaker Newt Gingrich - A closet Marxist, Newt Gingrich is affiliated with the occultic secret society known as the Bohemian Grove. Is Gingrich plotting to decimate the Constitution and install a Third Wave, borderless, planetary dictatorship?

President Bill Clinton - The perfect establishment hack, Clinton is a member of the traitorous Trilateral Commission, the Bilderbergers, and the Council on Foreign Relations. He and Hillary are deep into Egyptian occultism and Masonic magic.

Senator Robert Dole - A 33° Mason, Dole is a fake conservative. He's pro-gun control, pro-gay rights, pro-welfare, pro-abortion, and pro-New World Order. So why, then, is Senator Dole avidly supported behind-the-scenes by Pat Robertson and his so-called "Christian" Coalition?

Ross Perot - The Rockefellers' boy wonder, Perot, is anti-Constitution and pro-New World Order all the way.

Steve Forbes - Is he really that rich?...or is he a lackey of hidden money interests and Hollywood weirdos? Why did Steve Forbes escort his friend, Mikhail Gorbachev, on a tour of the U.S. in Forbes' plush executive jet?

Jesse Jackson - He's a 33° Prince Hall Mason and friend of Cuba's Fidel Castro. Does David Rockefeller secretly pull his strings?

Alan Keyes - This United Nations man professes his undying love for globalism. Who's secretly bankrolling this pro-New World Order stooge?

Jack Kemp - He's everything a liberal Democrat should be, so why does the establishment rave about Kemp being a "conservative?"

Lamar Alexander - As Secretary of Education, he gave us New Age, Outcome Based Education (OBE). Alexander is a disciple and student of occult philosopher, René Dubos.

Oliver North - He comes packaged as a Religious Right conservative. But watch out!—the insiders know him as "Mr. FEMA," the man who conspired to give us REX 84, the concentration camp program designed for incarceration of patriotic Americans.

Colin Powell - He's pro-gay, pro-race quotas, and pro-United Nations. In the U.S. Army, Powell was leap-frogged for promotion over more deserving military officers. Who made it all happen?

George Bush - "Mr. Skull & Bones Society" and now ex-President, Bush is still the best friend the Red Chinese butchers of Tiananmen Square ever had.

Rush Limbaugh - A draft dodger and millionaire, Rush Limbaugh is chief media pimp for the Republican establishment, a job for which he's been handsomely rewarded. Pro-abortionist Rush is a fan of Janet "Butch" Reno and a promoter of the Federal Reserve, the CFR, the WTO, the Trilateral Commission, and other globalist organizations.

And More New Age Politicians: Find out the bizarre truth about Illinois' Constitution-bashing Congressman Henry Hyde; Texas' porno producer Senator Phil Gramm; Rockefeller servant—and former Vice President—Dan Quayle; moralist pretender William Bennett; California's homosexual-promoting Governor Pete Wilson; North Carolina's 33° Mason Senator Jesse Helms; Iowa's Trilateralist Representative Jim Leach; Florida's 666 legislator Bill McCollum, and other New Age, globalist politicians.

THE CHALLENGE OF Mondragon

A Revolution In Responsibility

— Part One — by George Benello

The Basque region of Spain has, in recent years, seen the rise of a system of cooperatives that is unparalleled in its dynamism, growth and economic impact on a region. The system, which spreads throughout the surrounding area, is named after Mondragon, a town in the mountains of Guipuzkoa Province near Bilbao, where the first cooperatives were formed. Since its start 40 years ago, it has gained an international reputation, with similar models now being developed in England, Wales and the United States. While its precise connections to the anarchist tradition are unclear, the Mondragon system is an example of liberatory organization which, like its predecessors in the Spanish Civil War, has achieved success on a scale unequaled in any other part of the world.

The Mondragon network was founded by a Catholic priest, Don Jose Maria Arizmendiarrieta, who had narrowly escaped being put to death by General Francisco Franco for participating as a Republican in the Spanish Civil War. With collections from the citizens of Mondragon, he founded an elementary technical school in 1943. The first graduates included five men who, in 1956, founded a small worker-owned and -managed factory named ULGOR,[1] initially numbering 24 members, and given to the manufacture of a copied kerosene stove.

This cooperative venture proved successful and developed into the flagship enterprise of the whole system. At one point ULGOR numbered over 3,000 members, although this was later recognized as too large and was reduced. The structure of this enterprise served as the model for the later enterprises. Following Rochdale principles,[2] each member had one vote; membership was open to all; equity was held by members with external capitalization by debt, not equity; and continuing education.

Additional Principles

ULGOR adapted and added additional principles which are responsible for its dynamism and success, in contrast to almost all industrial cooperatives that came before. The additions can be summarized as follows:

It developed a system of individual internal accounts into which 70 percent of the profits (actually the "surplus") of the cooperative are placed. Each member has an internal account. The other 30 percent is put into a collective account for operating capital and expansion, and a portion of that is earmarked for the community. The administrators note how much of the surplus is ear-marked for each individual internal account, then each amount is automatically loaned back to the cooperative, at interest. Upon leaving, members receive 75 percent of the accumulated funds credited to their internal account, while 25 percent is retained as the capitalization which made the job possible. This system essentially allows the cooperative to capitalize close to 100 percent of its yearly surplus and gives it a capacity for internal capital accumulation unequaled by any capitalist enterprise. It also establishes an ongoing flow-through relation between the individual and collective portions of the surplus.

There is a fixed membership (now about $3,000), which represents a substantial investment in the cooperative and which could be deducted from initial earnings. This, too, is credited to the internal account. Both the membership fee and the share of the surplus represent methods of ensuring commitment through financial incentives. Unlike older cooperatives, which often determined the membership fee by dividing the net worth into the number of shares (making the fee prohibitively high), the one paid by Mondragon members is arbitrary and fixed at an affordable amount.

Unlike traditional cooperatives, members are considered to be worker-entrepreneurs, whose job is both to assure the efficiency of the enterprise and to help develop new enterprises. They do this in their deliberative assemblies and also by depositing their surplus in the system's bank, described below, which is then able to use it to capitalize new enterprises. Members have a strong commitment to this expansive principle, recognizing that the economic security of each cooperative is dependent on its being part of a larger system.

New members are placed on probation for a year to ensure that they are not only appropriately skilled but that they also possess the necessary capacity for cooperative work. Unlike a capitalist enterprise, where workers are considered factors of production, in a cooperative they are members of an organization with both rights and duties of membership, sharing also in the ownership of the organization. Thus, with open membership, members must be able to participate not simply as "hired hands," but to perform their membership duties by sharing in the management of the enterprise. This requires a capacity for responsibility and group participation that in turn implies a certain level of maturity.

The "anticipo," the earnings that in a conventional enterprise would be considered wages, is fixed at prevailing wage levels, minimizing conflict with other local enterprises. Also, the wage differential—the difference between the highest and lowest wage—was originally set at 3 to 1. This ensures an egalitarianism between workers and management (who are selected by the general assembly of workers) that makes for high morale. Wage levels are determined by a formula that takes into account the difficulty of the job, personal performance, experience and interpersonal skills. Relational skills have been given greater weight recently out of a recognition that in cooperative work they significantly affect group performance.[3]

Above all, Mondragon represents a systems approach to cooperative development. In addition to the base-level industrial cooperatives, there is a set of so-called second-degree cooperatives that engage in research, financing, technical training and education, technical assistance and social services. In addition, housing and consumer cooperatives are in place which collectively create a culture in which the basic activities of life take place. Members can operate within a context of interdependent and cooperating institutions that follow the same principles; this makes for enhanced efficiency.

Credit union added

To continue the story, three years after ULGOR was founded, Don Arizmendiarrieta suggested the need for a financial institution to help fund and give technical assistance to other start-up cooperatives. As a result, the Caja Laboral Popular (CLP),[4] a credit union and technical assistance agency, was founded. The CLP contains an "impresario" (entrepreneurial) division, with a staff of more than 100, which works intensively with groups desiring to start cooperatives or in rare cases to convert existing enterprises. It does location studies and market analyses, product development, plans the buildings and then works continuously for a number of years with the start-up group until its proposal is thoroughly developed and financially and organizationally sound.

In return, the CLP requires that the cooperative join the Mondragon system, via a contract of association which specifies the proven organizational and financial structure and entails a continuing supervisory relation on the part of the CLP. The surpluses of the industrial cooperatives are deposited in the CLP and reinvested in further cooperatives. This close and continuing relationship with the financial and technical expertise of the CLP is unique and largely responsible for the virtually 100 percent success rate within the system.

The CLP is considered a second-degree cooperative, and its board comprises a mix of first-level or industrial cooperative members and members of the CLP itself. Other second-degree cooperatives include a social service cooperative that assures 100 percent pension and disability benefits, a health-care clinic and a women's cooperative that allows for both flex-time and part-time work; women can move freely from this to the industrial cooperatives. Also, there is a system of educational cooperatives, among them a technical college that includes a production cooperative where students both train and earn money as part-time workers. This, too, is operated as a second-degree cooperative with a mixed board made up of permanent staff and students.

Expansion and diversification

Mondragon also features a large system of consumer cooperatives, housing cooperatives and a number of agricultural and building cooperatives. Today, the total system's net worth is in the billions. Mondragon consists of 86 production cooperatives averaging several hundred members, 44 educational institutions, seven agricultural cooperatives, 15 building cooperatives, several service cooperatives, a network of consumer cooperatives with 75,000 members and the bank. The Caja Laboral has 132 branches in the Basque region and recently opened an office in Madrid. This is significant, since it indicates a willingness to expand beyond the Basque region. The CLP's assets alone amount to more than a billion dollars.

Mondragon produces everything from home appliances (it is the second largest refrigerator manufacturer in Spain) to machine tool factories and ferry boats, both of which it exports. It represents more than one percent of the total Spanish export product. With its 18,000 workers, it accounts for about 15 percent of all the jobs in Guipuzkoa Province and five percent in the Basque country. Although a major part of its products are in middle-level technologies, it also produces high-technology products. Its research institute, Ikerlan, regularly accesses U.S. databases, including M.I.T.'s, and has developed its own industrial robots for external sale and for use in its own factories. This is typical of its approach to technology, which is to assimilate new technologies and make them its own. Mondragon has spent considerable time studying and implementing alternatives to the production line; its self-managed organizational system is now being complemented with the technology of group production.

The internal organization of a Mondragon cooperative features a general assembly, which ordinarily meets annually and selects management, and a social council which deals specifically with working members' concerns. There is also a directive council, made up of managers and members of the general assembly, in which managers have a voice but no vote. This system of parallel organization ensures extensive representation of members' concerns and serves as a system of checks and balances. Mondragon enterprises are not large; a deliberate policy now limits them to around 400 members. ULGOR, the first co-op, grew too large and at one point in its early history had a strike, organized by dissidents. The general assembly voted to throw the ringleaders out, but it learned its lesson: Size alone can breed discontent.

To obtain the benefits of large scale along with the benefits of small individual units, Mondragon has evolved a system of cooperative development. Here, a number of cooperatives constitute themselves as a sort of mini-conglomerate, coordinated by a management group elected from the member enterprises. These units are either vertically or horizontally integrated and can send members from one enterprise to the other as the requirements of the market and the production system change. They are able to use a common marketing apparatus and have the production capacity to retain a significant portion of a given market. This system was started by a set of enterprises in the same market banding together for inter-enterprise cooperation. Now Mondragon develops such systems from the outset.

Notes:

1. Its name was composed of the initials of the five founding families' surnames.
2. "Rochdale Society of Equitable Pioneers, one of the first consumers' cooperatives, was founded in 1844 in Rochdale, England, by 28 Lancashire weavers. Influenced by the theories of Robert Owen, they opened a grocery store which was so successful that they were able to establish a cooperative shoe factory and textile mill. The society laid down the basic tenets of subsequent consumer cooperation." (William Bridgwater and Elizabeth J. Sherwood, eds., The Columbia Encyclopedia, Second Edition, Columbia University Press, Morningside Heights, New York, 1950.)
3. Although the wage differential was later changed to 14:1, in practice it is only about 9:1. That is, the highest-paid position (e.g., a retail-chain manager) pays 9.27 times as much as an entry-level clerk's. Compare this to corporations, where the CEO may earn 150 times what other workers do. The World According To...Chomsky

.....Part Two

by Husayn Al-Kurdi

Al-Kurdi: Is there anything beyond reformism or special-interest group parochialism in U.S. politics? Have the advents of the "end of ideology" and the final triumph of so-called liberal Western democracy, as hailed by Daniel Bell and Francis Fukuyama, come to pass? Is there such a thing as "revolutionary reformism"?

Chomsky: First of all, remember that the "end of ideology," the "new class," the rise of "post-industrial society," all of the kinds of things that are supposed to be fashionable—these are over a century old. Charles Francis Adams back about 1880 was saying the same thing. This is just propaganda. Remember when Bell's book The End of Ideology, first came out? In the late 1950s, he predicted that we were finished with political struggle and from now on everybody's a technician. People would just sort of work their way into the magnificently functioning society. Well, what happened five years later? Nobody can predict tomorrow's weather. When they start predicting big phenomena in the world it's either careerism or stupidity.

As for the options available in the United States now, they are what we make them. There's no conflict between reformism and revolution. They're the same thing. Any sensible person will try to push reforms to the limit. You see what you can get, within the framework of existing institutions, to improve people's lives, to extend freedom and justice. You push it as far as you can. If it gets to the point where you can't push it any further, you undermine the institutions. And you do it with a goal, a vision in mind, maybe not a detailed plan of the future (nobody's that smart) but a general idea of the goals you are working toward, a vision that animates people's day-to-day life. Then you can even build functioning pieces of a future society within the present society—cooperatives and so on.

Out of this comes a constant interplay of trying to bring about changes, of trying to undermine illegitimate hierarchic and authoritarian structures, whether interpersonal or institutional. And at some stage this can become really large-scale social change, in which case we call it a revolution and proceed in other ways. These aren't in conflict. You don't sit around and say "I'm not going to try to carry out reforms because I want a revolution." That's a sure way to lead to the conclusion that you don't get anything. In fact, it's just about educating. People have to understand what the institutional constraints are. There's only one way to understand that, and that is to press them to the limit, and then you find out what they are.

Al-Kurdi: On the one hand, you have a distaste for people coming around and looking to you to take an overt political leadership role. On the other hand, you also acknowledge that you do have a certain responsibility to take a political role. What do we look for as elements of genuine social liberation?

Chomsky: There are too many answers, and everybody knows them. I could bring off a long list from A to Z. Basically, we ask ourselves, "In the sphere in which I think and function, in which I can do something or which I care about, where do I want things to be better?" In that sphere you will discover plenty of authoritarian and hierarchic structures. They may be between men and women, parents and children, corporations and workers, states and oppressed people, all kinds. You ask yourself, "Are they legitimate? Is that authority legitimate?" In fact what you demand is that it justify itself. The burden of proof is always on those who exercise the authority. They have to justify their right to do so. When you can't find justification for authority, you try to get other people to question it, and you work to eliminate it.

Al-Kurdi: Which causes, struggles and issues do you pick? Do you pick, say, abuse of children or do you pick the crushing of the Kurds or do you pick lowering wages?

Chomsky: There's no answer to that. It depends on where your interests and commitments lie. They're all right, they're "the right thing," and people who work on all of them are helping each other. You work where you are. For example, I can't do anything where I'm sitting to organize workers in Detroit. I'm not going to be a labor organizer. If I tried, it would be a joke. So, I do what I can. Without any false modesty about it, there are some things I do pretty well. I can read, I can look at documents, I can write about things and so on and so forth.

Al-Kurdi: The 50th anniversary of the founding of the United Nations was in 1995, and a variety of protests took place. Were you protesting, and if so where and what would you protest to mark the occasion?

Chomsky: If I were protesting about the U.N., and there's a lot to protest about, I wouldn't protest at U.N. headquarters in

New York; I would protest in Washington or London or Paris. To protest against the U.N. is like protesting against the shadow and not the substance. The U.N. acts insofar as the major powers, mostly U.S., allow it to act, and it does what those powers, mostly U.S., allow it to do. If you want to talk about the U.N., you don't talk about the words in the charter or the functioning institutions, but the constraints that are imposed on them by the powers that run them, and overwhelmingly that's Washington.

The United States was perfectly happy to allow the U.N. to function back in the late forties and early fifties, when it ran it completely. By the fifties, when decolonization began, the U.N. became somewhat more democratized, at least representative of more countries in the world. At that point, U.S. interest in the U.N. began to fade because it couldn't control it completely. There was a nonaligned bloc developing. By the 1960s the United States became completely hostile to the United Nations because it was just out of control. From the mid-1960s until today, the overwhelming majority of vetoes on the Security Council have been by the United States. Second was England, third France and fourth, as long as it existed, was the Soviet Union. That's exactly the opposite of the story that you're always told, but that's the way it was.

In the 1980s the Reagan administration just decided to destroy it. So UNESCO,[1] which was mostly Third-World interests, was virtually demolished. UNCTAD[2] was the one agency which monitored international corporations. That was destroyed. U.N.-related institutions such as the World Court were simply undermined. The World Court, after all, came out with a judgment against the United States in 1986, calling it to terminate its unlawful use of force against Nicaragua. Just recently, when an issue was coming up involving Iraq, U.S. Ambassador to the U.N. Madeleine Albright stated that they better go along with the United States or else. She said, "We will act multilaterally when we can and unilaterally when we must." In other words, "You do as we say or we just kick you in the pants." Under those conditions, protesting about the United Nations doesn't make a lot of sense.

Al-Kurdi: I am involved in a national liberation struggle, that of the Kurds. Part of my work involves transmitting back to the Kurds the variety of viewpoints about them, including those of social-justice protagonists elsewhere in the world. You definitely fit this category, so I am asking you: What is your advice to us in our quest for national liberation, in terms of dealing with the U.N. and the U.S. government, given our circumstances which you are familiar with?

Chomsky: If any group has a justified claim to self-determination, the Kurds certainly do. International arrangements should be made to guarantee them a unified expression of this right. You know, I never give advice to people who are suffering and struggling. They know better than I do what they have to do; they don't need any advice from me, and I'm in no position to give it.

The main thing that any group has to do if they want to achieve anything is to get their own house in order. You can't do a thing unless you do that. It's not going to solve the problem, but it's a prerequisite to solving it. Now outside forces are very eager to insure that they don't get their house in order, for obvious reasons. There'll be all sorts of efforts to split and undermine, to support this group against that group, to play on this or that leader's effort to get more power and so on. The Kurds have a long history of that, which I don't need to tell you. You know it a hundred times as well as I do. It's going on in a very devastating way right now. Unless internal issues are resolved, outside forces will always be trying to stir them up and keep them from being resolved.

Any oppressed group, whether welfare mothers in New York or Kurds in northern Iraq, will have to explore weak spots in the international system and try to capitalize on them, and of course try to build up solidarity with international forces. What has helped those occasional national liberation struggles that have somehow had some success was almost invariably traceable, at least in part, to support within the society oppressing them.

Take a look at history, and you find that things go on reflecting the same structures of power, which are very stable.

Al-Kurdi: So, you think there is still some margin for that sort of thing—not that there's "some" margin, there's as much as there ever was—which is very little, right?

Chomsky: Nothing has changed in that respect. Now people talk about all kinds of big changes in the New World Order. It's all nonsense in my opinion. You have to bear in mind that it's very much in the interest of intellectuals, ideological managers, to present very inflated stories about great changes and so on. Take a look at history, and you find that things go on under different contingencies, but they go on reflecting the same structures of power, which are very stable. Take a look at the transnational corporate power which now dominates the world. It's simply the inheritor of the European conquest of the world which goes back 500 years. It's taken different forms at different times, but the continuities are very stable.

Al-Kurdi: You may be even more pessimistic than I am about everything.

Chomsky: Not really. Take the last 500 years. It's a much better world than it was 500 years ago, or for that matter 30 years ago. Take the United States, where we live. Right now, there's a big flap going on about Vietnam. It's a totally grotesque discussion about McNamara. The reason it's a grotesque discussion is because of what the country was like 30 years ago: Then, it was impossible to conceive in the United States of the plain and elementary fact that John F. Kennedy sent the U.S. army and air force to attack South Vietnam. Even the antiwar movement couldn't conceive of it because they themselves were brainwashed. Right now the question cannot be discussed. The only question being discussed is "Did we make a mistake?" That's like the Nazi high command after Stalingrad worried about "making a mistake."

12 Good Reasons Why The Time Is Now...

*No longer can...*we: 1. Trust our government to do the right thing. 2. Pay corporations to distort the truth, exploit us and control our behavior. 3. Trust producers of consumer goods not to endanger us, our planet and our children. 4. Deny our knowing yet struggle to specialize. 5. Trust in the practice of medicine to be honest, enlightening and accountable. 6. Trust our elected officials to tell us the truth. 7. Burden the accountable, provide benefits and privileges to the opportunistic and breed dependence. 8. Allow courts of law to operate void of responsible jurisprudence. 9. Freely exercise our right (not privilege) to congregate and worship. 10. Trust parents to be accountable for their children. 11. Trade our children's liberty for financial benefits. 12. No longer are we... "We The People"... but,

"LEARNING TO LIVE WITHOUT A SOCIAL SECURITY NUMBER"

That wouldn't happen anymore. Now if a president sent the U.S. Air Force to bomb villages massively in some country, to authorize napalm and so on, people would know it, so it wouldn't happen.

Al-Kurdi: But it happened in Iraq.
Chomsky: No it didn't. What happened in Iraq was dramatically different. First of all, Iraq had attacked another country. Secondly, there were huge protests against the war before it started. In the case of Vietnam, there were no protests for five or six years, and they were simply attacking civilian targets with no pretext whatsoever. South Vietnam hadn't attacked anyone. That's a radical difference. The Bush administration knew that very well and leaked documents showing that they had to get this over with fast because they were going to lose political support otherwise.

Al-Kurdi: There's a related situation I'd like you to comment on, the sanctions against Iraq.
Chomsky: I think the sanctions at this point are basically for two reasons. One is of the same category as the means employed against Cuba, Nicaragua and Vietnam: Anyone who stands up to the United States is going to get not just beaten but crushed. This is something that certainly everybody in the Third World should understand, and I'm pretty sure everyone in the slums of the United States understands. If you are running a little store in Chicago and the local Mafia don sends his man around to collect his protection money, and you say you're not going to pay, they'll not just take the money but really beat the shit out of you, to make a lesson of you so that other people don't get the same idea. The United States is the world's big Mafia don. If anyone dares to stand up, you have to make an example out of them so that nobody else gets funny ideas.

There's a second reason that is narrower but probably significant, and that has to do with the price of oil. If Iraqi oil gets back on the market, it's going to drive the price down. The United States historically has wanted a price not too high and not too low. Not too high because that would begin to hurt the economy. Not too low because that ıld begin to cut off profits, most of ch flow right back to the United :es or its client England.

ɪurdi: Of course, you are very well aware be effects of this embargo, such as the rdation of half a generation or more of ·i babies, and the unnecessary deaths of · one million people in Iraq since the war er the sanctions regime.

msky: That's just not a considera- ı. In the past couple of months the ıgress has been passing legislation ch will have the certain effect of ·easing the rate of child malnutrition infant mortality.

ɪurdi: Getting back to the question of sol- rity. Who do the oppressed people around world go into solidarity with? The Left ms to be impotent, irrelevant and unin- ested. Is the Left as we have known it fin- ed as a historical force?

omsky: They're not finished. They're over the place. They may not call emselves "the Left." Take the solidar- movements with Central America in e 1980s. Were they "Left"? A lot of em were conservative Christians.

·Kurdi: And a lot of them couldn't care less ɔat happens to the non-Israeli people of e Middle East.

ıomsky: That's because they didn't ow about it, and if they found out out it they would care. I know that cause I spend a lot of time talking about o them. Demystifying Court Decisions

Part Three: What is a Decision?

by Craig Straub

Before you can get much good out of studying a decision, you need to know exactly what one is, which parts of it are merely enlightening or entertaining and which are "live ammunition" for your own court battle. Mistaking one for the other can result in wasted time and lost lawsuits, so this is no trivial subject.

In particular you will want to understand these various parts of a decision: an opinion, a holding, and a dictum.[1] They are somewhat similar, but their effects are very different.

"Decision" refers to the court's overall judgment, including what the court wants done with the case (called the disposition) and what it decided on the various issues that were raised (called the holdings). We will talk more about holdings later. For now, the case is "disposed of" by being either "affirmed" or "reversed": Either the lower court's decision should stand as it is or be set aside and the higher court's decision put into effect. Sometimes the higher court remands (sends back) the case to the lower court for a new trial with instructions to the judge concerning how the new trial should be handled.

The Busse case that we discussed in Parts One and Two of this series was disposed of this way: "The U.S. Tax Court was correct in its holding, and we affirm its decision and order. Affirmed." That is, the tax court's decision that Mr. Busse didn't owe more taxes was upheld. The IRS lost and could have appealed to the Supreme Court, but it didn't. This part of the decision is "case specific"; it is not applicable to anyone else. If that were all that was recorded, we would have no reason for studying cases.

The Meat of the Matter

For everyone but Mr. Busse, the payoff is the opinion. It is the legal reasoning the court followed in coming to its conclusion. Portions of each opinion are binding on lower courts. They are the holdings, the parts of the written opinion that other courts rely upon when they use the case as an established precedent to form their own decisions. The Busse case included seven holdings. We discussed the sixth in Part One, quoting that the IRS cannot rewrite "legislative enactments to give . . . effect to their ideas of policy and fitness . . ."

Some reporter series help you out by summarizing and numbering the holdings at the beginning of each case. These are called the "notes of decision." They are not part of the judges' work; they are written by the publisher (in this case, West Publishing Co.) to help you and to index the case. (Remember, when we Shepardized[2] Busse we saw numbers superscripted after the cases listed. For instance, a superscript "6" meant the case discussed note #6 of the Busse holding. Unfortunately, some reporters, such as U.S. Reports, do not provide this useful tool.)

As we saw in Part Two, the sixth note of Busse actually reads, "6. Internal Revenue 152." The 152 is a "key number," another useful research tool that helps you locate all of the other federal cases which discuss this issue. Law libraries have a set of books called Federal Practice Digest, where we could go to volume "I" for Internal Revenue and find key number 152 to view these cases. It's a handy tool when we want to stock our argument full of cases regarding just this one issue!

Holdings vs. Dicta

Be sure to quote only from holdings in your argument, not the incidental portions of the opinion called dicta. Dicta is a plural and shortened form of obiter dictum, meaning "remarks by the way." These collateral opinions of a judge do not affect the outcome of the case and are used for "illustration, argument, analogy or suggestion. The doctrine of stare decisis does not encompass dicta, and therefore, dicta are not binding authority . . . and cannot be cited as precedent in subsequent lawsuits."[3]

How can you tell whether you are quoting dicta or holdings? If you find the idea listed by West in one of the numbered notes, you can be sure it's a holding. Some people only quote from the notes of decision, but very old cases not published by West don't have this feature. With both forms of published cases, you must be careful to look at the context of the discussion. If the judge said something like, "On the other hand . . . if this had happened, then so and so would be true," it is an illustration or comment on a principle, not a comment directly on the case itself; you wouldn't use it.

Be careful! The opposition will sometimes intentionally quote dicta to advance false reasoning. Again, the only way to catch them at this is to read the case! Don't accept their ideas on a case as the truth. View them only as opinions which can be wrong. Every day in every court, half of the lawyers are wrong, i.e. the judge or jury decides against them. So, don't be put off when a lawyer spouts the law. What's important is what the judge says.

We have talked about opinions in general, but there are several types of opinions: concurring, dissenting and per curiam, which we will look at next.

Interpreting Court Decisions

When we read the body of an opinion we are actually reading the majority opinion which is agreed upon by at least two of the three judges on the panel (or five of nine in the Supreme Court). Once a majority agrees, the court can issue its decision. One judge usually writes it up for the others.

Sometimes the judges do not agree, of course, and one or more of them may write opinions that diverge from the majority. There are two types of these. The first is a concurring opinion: A judge "concurs" when he accepts the final result that the majority arrived at, but disagrees with how they arrived at it. He gives his own legal reasonings but these do not become part of the holdings. Not all concurring opinions express disapproval, however; some just want to highlight or reinforce the majority opinion by taking an alternate legal route. Sometimes more than one judge may write concurring opinions, or they may say, "Concur in part and dissent in part." So, we'll talk about dissents next.

A dissenting opinion is an outright disagreement within the panel. A judge who writes this opinion rejects the decision as well as the legal reasons for arriving at it. The judge would then enumerate his reasons for disagreeing with the majority decision. There was no dissenting opinion in Busse, but if there had been it would have meant that the judge wanted to find for the IRS and reverse the lower court decision.

The key question with dissents is then: "How can I use them—should I quote them to back my argument?" I believe the answer lies in something that former justice Charles Evans Hughes said, "A dissent is a court of last resort in an appeal to the brooding spirit of the law, to the intelligence of a future day."

What this means to me is that a future generation of judges may someday agree with the dissent and upset the precedent, but that is very unlikely when a Citizen is disputing a constitutional issue. Relying on a dissenting opinion for support will not advance your position in any way, unless the media and general public disagree with the precedent and want a change. Your case may then spark the change, but that is unlikely.

While you want to avoid building your argument on dissenting opinions (after all, they lost) you can make excellent use of them to show the illogic they contain and why they lost.[4]

Last, there is the per curiam ("by the court") ruling. This is "an opinion of the whole court."[5] Usually, the decision omits the name(s) of the judge(s) who wrote it.

Reading an entire case, including the concurring and dissenting opinions, can be very enjoyable, especially if it was a very important and controversial one. For instance, Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co.[6] established that the income tax of 1894 was a direct tax and therefore unconstitutional and void. In Pollock, three of the nine Supreme Court justices (Harlan, Brown and Jackson) wrote dissenting opinions. The majority opinion is 37 pages long, while the three dissents total another 73 pages! Each dissenter wrote why he supported the income tax act of 1894.

Obviously one who holds the majority view that an income tax must be indirect to be constitutional would read the dissenting opinions merely to understand the opposition—not to quote from it, but to strengthen his own position.

Warning: If the opposition were to quote from Pollock, it would more than likely use the dissenting opinions. This could be a tricky maneuver to steer the court to a wrong judgment, so you must have read the case in order to expose this chicanery! Next time we'll get to the bottom line: how to analyze a case.

Craig Straub owns a small business which formerly did business with his State, and he has successfully defended himself in litigation with a State agency. The judge dismissed the case in pretrial motions. He also has a case on its way to the Illinois Supreme Court regarding his unalienable rights as protected by the U.S. Constitution. He believes you are best served in the legal system when you represent yourself.

PROMOTION PUBLISHING

Breaking With Tradition Brings Amazing Success to ProMotion Publishing

When I started ProMotion Publishing in late 1993 I knew our old–fashioned principles might make it difficult, if not impossible, to operate successfully competing with the publishing giants who dominate this business. I was told by several long term publishers that our distribution plan could not succeed against the entrenched financial and marketing scheme that strangles small publishers and mistreats most authors. So, I was astonished by our immediate and world wide success.

I initially started ProMotion Publishing to market my own book, Malice in Wonderland, The Congressional Crook Book. In the six months following the publishing of Malice in Wonderland I was interviewed on over 600 radio and TV shows including Sally Jesse Rafael. It didn't take long for me to be besieged by unpublished authors who sought someone who would at least listen to them. At first, I was reluctant to publish their books because I know how difficult it is to profitably market a new book for first time authors but the importance of the message in many manuscripts and the quality of the writing persuaded me to take up the challenge. However, I was determined to do it only if I could devise a plan that would pay authors their proper due.

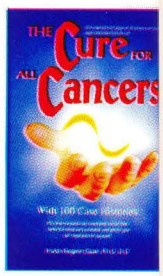
With that as my primary goal, I assembled a publishing team. That team developed a plan that would pay authors over 60% of net sales and pay our successful authors weekly; two important things no other publisher does. Traditionally, most authors get between 4% and 10% of net sales and are usually paid once or twice a year. And too many publishers are arrogant characters who often mistreat and abuse desperate authors. We were intent on treating authors with respect, which starts by recognizing that their manuscripts represent their dreams and are their prized and valuable property. Because we recognize manuscripts as an author's property we, unlike other publishers, decided to keep copyrights in the author's name in bold print and not take it away in small print.

In order to pay our authors 60% of net, pay them weekly, and still make ProMotion profitable, we had to break nearly every established tradition in the publishing industry. We had to be a 100% cash business in an industry that knows only long–term credit. This was a challenge that everyone I talked with in publishing said would be impossible. Well, we did the impossible. In less than two years, we had more than 1,500 bookstores paying cash, plus shipping and handling. No other publisher in America has been able to do this. Most of these bookstores buy from us several times each month. By helping bookstores with their promotion and distribution we have some (with only one store) which have purchased more than $50,000 worth of our books.

To break the payment–on–terms tradition and make this program work we had to be absolutely sure we dealt with everyone in a friendly, but firm basis based using old fashioned business principles. Since bookstores have purchased books on credit for over 100 years, and because there is no additional benefit to the stores to pay us cash, in the beginning we had to take a lot of time to fully explain why we required cash rather than offering terms. We had to do it so that there would never be a hint of arrogance. What is most amazing is how readily they accepted our program when they understood our position. To make ProMotion profitable we had to sell a large percentage of our books at full retail, we had to sell books by the thousands each week and be the epitome of efficiency.

To that end, we designed PC and Mac computer systems that could effectively handle a myriad of typesetting and design software. We developed our own computer programs to administer record keeping and author reporting requirements. To sell thousands of books for our authors, we created one of the most unique and effective book marketing plans for new authors in American history. We decided to market each book directly to the consumer first so that a major portion of sales would be at full–retail price. This has allowed many of our authors to earn from $3.00 to $12.00 per book, depending on the retail price. It also created a demand at the bookstore and provided us with a valuable list of customers to who we could easily go back when an author wrote a new book or added an audio or video tape. We also produced a TV show and a salable video for most of our authors.

It was one thing to devise a better financial plan that would give authors more per book sold. It was something else to create a marketing plan that would sell their books by the thousands each month or, in some cases, each week. But we were convinced we could if our marketing was unique, creative and aggressive. When we started promoting Dr. Hulda Clark's book, The Cure for All Cancers, we couldn't even get magazines and newspapers to advertise it because they said no one had the cure for all cancers. So we created a cancer newsletter which we advertised in the classified section of the newspapers which had originally refused our ads. This kind of ad cost us a fraction of what a display ad would have cost. In the newsletter we had a full page ad for the book The Cure for All Cancers. We offered the newsletter free to anyone who would send a self–addressed stamped envelope. The results were amazing. Every paper accepted our ad and we sold thousands of books.



Whether through PR or paid advertising, we had to make it easy for potential book buyers anywhere and any time to order our books. We wanted those buyers to be able to recall our phone number. To do that we established a nationally recognizable 800 number; 1–800–231–1776. It worked! Many people remembered the number easily without writing it down. In an effort to capture and upgrade orders we answer the phones with live operators 24 hours a day. We continually had to use creativity to overcome such marketing problems and to enhance sales in other ways. We increased sales by establishing an 800 number so prospective book buyers could listen to our authors describe their books on audio tape. At the end of each tape the author gives out our 800 number for easy ordering.

Our efforts quickly paid off big! We set up independent distributors worldwide. Many made initial orders of $10,000 to $15,000 worth of books to become book distributors for us. To support our authors, distributors and bookstores we set up a PR team which worked all day booking our authors on radio and TV shows. Their efforts resulted in more than 3,000 bookings in two years, including such shows as Oprah and Sally Jessie Rafael. We also generated feature stories in newspapers and magazines every month. To maximize the tremendous PR we aggressively promoted our books through paid advertising. We ran book ads on radio nearly everyday of the year. We produced full–page, full–color ads on the inside front cover of several magazines every month. To be cost effective we set up our own graphics company and promotional agency. This gave us design control and the power needed to deal with advertising and promotional opportunities. Our graphics department created promotional calendars, point–of–purchase book displays and unique incentives for many of our books. We constantly searched for unique ways to promote and sell our books.

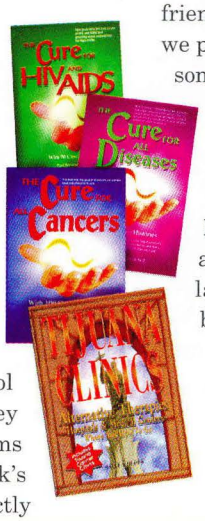
Once our customer base reached 10,000 we began producing periodic mailings – always being careful to separate and tailor each mailing to our targeted audience. Our success with this has been beyond expectation. On one particular mailing we asked the buyers of one of our books to buy more of the same book to give to friends and relatives. In fact, we asked them to buy 12 of the same book which required a $150.00 purchase. Some of our staff thought that I was crazy to try such a mailing but unbelievable as it might seem, orders rolled in for several weeks. What I've learned is that most marketers don't understand how to develop real buyer's loyalty or how powerful such loyalty can be.

We also believe in maximizing all our efforts and our products. To that end, we have announcement mailings to customers who reside close to a radio station where our authors will be interviewed. We produce special events that require a boldness, devoid of cockiness but full of confidence. This attitude helped us to produce news conferences for one of our authors on the steps of Congress and at the entrance to the United Nations.

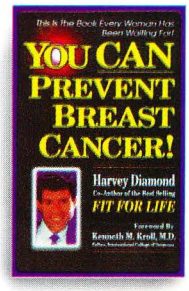
Because we don't use much of the established book distribution system, a system with little sympathy for business done the old–fashioned way, we cultivated hundreds of small independent distributors throughout the United States. The effectiveness of these distributors has been astonishing. One 80–year–young distributor in Florida has already sold more than 10,000 books for us. What other publisher in America can make such a claim? The uniqueness and power of our marketing system has helped us sell over 300,000 books for one of our first–time authors. What's more, that author is paid $20,000 to $50,000 every week!

To give our authors every opportunity to maximize their potential earnings, we provide books to them at just $1.00 over cost. Most of them make from $10.00 to $15.00 for each book they sell when they speak. Our primary goal is to do all we can to help authors make money.

There's got to be a good reason why authors from around the world, authors published by the big–time mainstream publishing houses, are now coming to ProMotion Publishing. On one occasion, one of those authors was told by his New York publisher that John Perkins was the biggest shyster in the publishing business. My response was, "Hallelujah! ProMotion Publishing, which is just a drop in the ocean, must be a major irritation to those Wall Street publishers."



Most of the books we publish are overlooked and under–valued by other publishers. They are almost all controversial. Often they are even risky because they stand up against an abusive government gone out of control and its arrogant agencies like the FDA and the IRS. Or they dare to attack organizations that threaten our basic freedoms like the AMA and most drug companies. Dr. Hulda Clark's controversial books on Cancer, AIDS and other diseases directly challenge the thinking of the AMA and most doctors about their cause and cure. Tijuana Clinics is the first definitive book about alternative medical treatments available just south of the border. It is full of detailed information including a map of how to get to each clinic. We also insist on controlling each book title and cover design. Both elements are critical to a book's success. Most authors and few publishers seem to understand the purpose and power of book titles and cover designs. It's been a major reason for our success.



There has got to be a good reason why, Harvey Diamond, co–author of Fit For Life, a national and international bestseller, is an author with ProMotion Publishing. His new book, You Can Prevent Breast Cancer! is about to take the world by storm. More importantly, it will save the lives of countless women.

All these things added together have helped us in our first two years to reach over a quarter of a million dollars in cash sales per month with a growth rate of between 5% and 10% per month. And for the first time in our history we are soon going to promote ProMotion Publishing. Up to this time authors came to us without any promotional efforts. As a matter of fact, we haven't ever had a flyer which describes ProMotion Publishing.

We are now adding about four new books per month but plan to take it to ten books soon. By just maintaining our present growth and adding a few new books we believe sales could reach five million dollars in cash sales by the end of 1996 – our third year of business.

I was asked to share our story at a conference of small publishers. I learned a few days after the conference that almost no one believed me. Most had been publishers for years and were firmly convinced that no publisher could get bookstores to prepay for books, let alone pay shipping and handling. There has got to be some truth here that explains why they are struggling with meager profits and little hope.

One of our basic philosophies at ProMotion is that when you give, it comes back to you pressed down, shaken together and running over. That's why we're so confident that we can give so much to our authors. Another of our philosophies is that when you stand on old–fashioned business principles you can confidently ask any reasonable thing from your customers and get it.

Let me share with you an example of how we stand on our marketing principles. A large national, New York book distributor called me one day because he, "...could not get satisfaction from any other ProMotion staff." He told me he was prepared to give us a large order for our books but that he required terms. I told him in as friendly a way as I could that we did business the old–fashioned way, we pay cash for what we get and get paid cash for what we sell. With some anger he asked how I could possibly turn down such a big order. I told him that hundreds of bookstores had bought our books, paid cash, shipping and handling and that if I gave him terms it would not be fair to them and worse yet he would discount the books and hurt the very people who helped us build ProMotion Publishing. I wouldn't do that for any amount of money. A few weeks later, we began to receive prepaid book orders from him.

We're changing the way things are being done in the publishing business but we're not doing it alone. Thousands of bookstore buyers, and distributors around the world are helping.

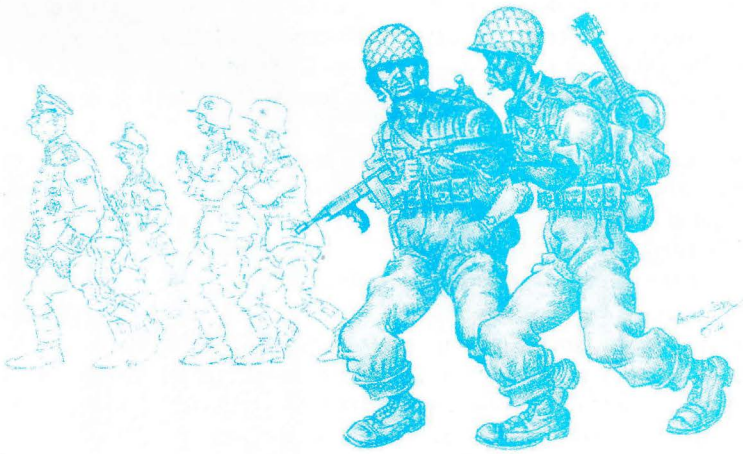
Portrait of A Master Illustrator

by Pierce Butler

Born in 1894 to a middle-class Jewish family in Poland, Arthur Szyk ("shick") began very early to draw, his talent encouraged and nurtured by his parents. Their belief in him bore fruit when they sent him to study in Paris: At age 15, he revived the 400-year-old art of illumination,[1] which had been lost to civilization. He eventually became a master of this exquisite form.

In 1914 Szyk enlisted as a Polish soldier to fight Germany, but during World War I, "the war to end war," he came to hate this social psychosis. Nonetheless, he served honorably and was even decorated.



"And what would you do with Hitler?"
"I would have made him a Negro and dropped him somewhere in the USA..."

When peace came, he moved back to Paris and raised a family. Then Hitler's army annexed his homeland, and Szyk moved his family to London and, in 1940, to the United States.

By this time his paintings, manuscripts, postal designs and corporate advertisements had made him world famous. Since his constant themes were individual freedom, human dignity and religious tolerance, he easily sold his stylized cartoons which were already popular in Europe. One survey showed them to be even more popular with American soldiers overseas than "cheesecake" pinups![2]

Due to Szyk's high-profile antifascism, Hitler grew to hate him so much that he put a price on his head and personally ordered the execution of his mother: She was burned alive. Despite this personal tragedy, Szyk continued to produce his cartoon satires in magazines and newspapers almost daily.

He was a very observant man who dedicated himself to freedom. In 1944, he drew the cartoon above showing two American soldiers, one black, the other white. Despite his great success before this, every publication to which he submitted the cartoon rejected it. This was the only time he had this experience during his long, prolific career.

Probably it was this now-notorious cartoon which drew negative attention to Szyk from some high-ranking Americans—just as he had infuriated der Fuhrer. When the McCarthy "witch hunts" (rather, the J. Edgar Hoover deceptive-propaganda campaign) began in the 1950s, Szyk found himself listed among suspected communists. He was devastated that the country he had so respected as a champion of liberty now sought to take away his own.

Despite world-class talent and fame as an artist and patriot—his subjects included the American Revolution, George Washington and other American heroes (see plate opposite)—Szyk received no mercy when brought before his inquisitors. Although his masterpieces were collected by the British royal family, the Rothschilds and the Roosevelts (he had campaigned for FDR), he was given neither support nor favors in his time of need. Betrayed by the government he had so believed in, Szyk died a few months later, some say of a broken heart.

Perceptions is proud to reprint the universally rejected Arthur Szyk cartoon from a rare copy, plus the second work which further shows this great artist's feel for both his art and his fellow man. The conditions satirized by the "offensive" drawing are widely acknowledged today, but in 1944 the subject was strictly taboo.

Winters Story A Hit Throughout The World

The China Star called The Jason Winters Story, "Exciting, thrilling and inspiring...undoubtedly the best true story of the century."

That response to Sir Jason Winters' most recent book has been echoed around the world.

The Jason Winters Story is actually a compilation of the world's four best-selling natural health books into one tremendous publication.

Over 12 million copies of four Jason Winters books Killing Cancer, In Search of the Perfect Cleanse, Breakthrough, and The Ultimate Combination have been sold worldwide. Now they have been combined in The Jason Winters Story, offering you a complete look at Jason Winters' bout with cancer, the disappearance of his tumor, the importance of herbs, cleansing and blood purifying.

The Jason Winters Story also delves deeply into Sir Jason's beliefs concerning the medical establishment, positive thinking and alternative health methods.

A terminal cancer patient given just three months to live, Jason Winters refused major surgery and travelled the world in search of an herbal remedy. He now has total remission and shares his experiences for the benefit of cancer patients and others seeking to avoid this dreaded illness.

Born in England to a working-class family, Jason Winters was 17 before he rode in a car for the first time, or ate in a restaurant. But he had dreams and immigrated to Canada in 1947 where he worked on a farm in Saskatchewan. He then worked in Northern British Columbia as a lumberjack as well as with the Salmon Fisheries Commission.

Seeking adventure, Sir Jason crossed the Canadian Rockies by hot air balloon. For Canada's centennial celebration he retraced Sir Alexander McKenzie's footsteps down the McKenzie River by canoe, a trip of more than 2,000 miles. Still not satisfied in his zest for adventure, Sir Jason crossed the Sahara Desert by camel before working for the New Zealand government testing seat belts by crashing cars into brick walls.

Sir Jason attempted to be the first man to cross the Atlantic Ocean by balloon but crashed half way. Unlike most balloonists, he removed the typical basket from beneath the balloon and replaced it with a small boat, a fact that may have saved his life as it took several days for him to be rescued after crashing into the Atlantic.

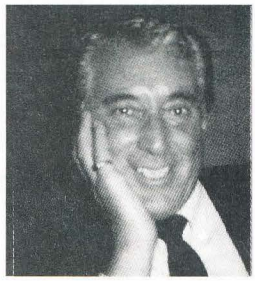
The lure of Hollywood brought fame in the role of Geronimo in the movie "Apache Agent." As a stunt man, Sir Jason performed in all of Audie Murphy's films. His adventures spanned 20 years, but then came the biggest of all tests...facing death from terminal cancer.

In 1978 a large, cancerous growth appeared on the side of Sir Jason's neck. Normal cancer treatments had little effect on the growth and he was told to prepare to die. But Jason didn't give up on life. He turned to the alternative health field and natural remedies. He found special herbs on three different continents.

The individual herbs had little effect on Sir Jason, but when he mixed the three herbs together and began drinking the concoction, he appeared to be on the road to recovery. Today Sir Jason is a healthy specimen of manhood.

During the time since his discovery of the special herbs, Sir Jason has written numerous books and has been invited to speak to hundreds of thousands of people all around the world. Presidents, prime ministers and congressmen have come to him to talk about physical problems in their families. Through television and radio, he has reached millions more with his thoughts about alternative health care.

Sir Jason was knighted in Malta in 1985 for his work in the health field. He has received the Medal of Honour in Madrid and laureates of Belgium, the Netherlands and South Africa.



Sir Jason Winters

Today Sir Jason continues to help people throughout the world and is willing to visit with anyone who is concerned with leading a healthy life. He has been written about, talked about, admired and loved by people in every country where his books and herbal formulas are used. His sincerity, knowledge and compassion have been the comfort of many who are lost or sick.

If you are a real devotee of health and well-being, you will want to include The Jason Winters Story in your library. As Hans Nielsen said, "From Hollywood to Holland, from Toronto to Tibet, from Bangkok to Singapore and Berlin to Borneo, what an adventure."

Confessions of a "Vegan" Cattle Rancher

by Howard Lyman

I was raised on an organic dairy farm in Montana during the Second World War. My parents couldn't hire help, so both of them milked the cows, and the task of caring for me, my brother and sisters fell to my grandparents. "Day care" back then was much different than today; there were no swings, slides and Leggo blocks. Instead we kids worked full-time in the garden. This is where my love of living soil began. Since I was four or five years old all I have ever wanted to be was a farmer.

This early decision made my approach to school simple. I wanted to be a farmer, and my parents owned a farm. There was no need to pay attention in school because all I had to do was get out of school so I could start my career. The only thing I did in the first 12 years of school was party and play football, and I was very good at both. I must admit I was very surprised at the end of my senior year when I was informed that I would graduate. In retrospect, I suppose the teachers thought that if I didn't graduate there was a chance I would come back, and rather than take that chance they gave me a diploma. I was thrilled to start my lifelong ambition.

The first real wake-up call of my life came when I realized that farming was a business and I lacked the tools to run one. Unwilling to let this dissuade me, I did what most American youth do who have neglected to learn anything in the first twelve years of school; I immediately enrolled in college. While there, I made sure not to repeat the mistakes I had made in high school. Knowing that I wanted to make our small organic dairy farm into an agribusiness, I learned about herbicides, pesticides, hormones and medication. I graduated with a degree in agriculture from Montana State University with enough chemistry to qualify for a Nobel prize. This time I was sure I was well armed with the necessary tools to succeed in my lifelong dream of farming.

After 25 years of hard work, I had taken that small, organic, family farm and turned it into an operation of 1,000 range cows and calves, a 5,000-head confinement feedlot and thousands of acres of field crops. With as many as 30 employees at a time, I thought I was the Donald Trump of agriculture. No problem was too tough for me. If greater yields were needed, I used more herbicides. If insects were a problem, I used more pesticides. If larger equipment was called for, I would buy out my neighbors, remove the fences and farm on a larger scale. I had all the answers.

My second wake-up call arrived in 1979 when I became paralyzed from the waist down. The doctors thought the problem was a tumor pressing on my spinal cord. They said that if the tumor were inside the cord, the chance that I would ever walk again was one in a million. When someone quotes you that kind of odds he is telling you to get a catalog and pick out your favorite wheelchair.

The night before the operation, many things went through my mind. The most persistent thought was the picture of the once-living soil of my childhood after 25 years of my chemical addiction. I had turned that living soil into matter that resembled asbestos. It looked like we had imported if from Mars. I knew that I was responsible for the change, and I couldn't lay the blame on anyone else. I also wondered what kind of person I would be after the operation. Would I just sit in my wheelchair and feel sorry for myself, or would I have the intestinal fortitude to make the rest of my life amount to something worthwhile? That night I made a solemn vow that no matter the result of the operation I would commit the rest of my life to attempting to pass on more natural resources to the next generation than those we had received. I wasn't sure what that really meant—maybe less use of chemicals, more crop rotation and a return to an organic form of farming.

The 12 hours of surgery, which included removing the back of several of my vertebra, revealed that the tumor was inside the covering on the spinal cord. When the covering was opened the tumor was not only on the inside, it was also under the cord. The doctors could not raise the cord to remove it. All they could do was select a nerve, cut it and hope the one they cut had the tumor attached to it like a fish on a line. If there was more than one nerve attached to the tumor, it would sever the other nerves, and I would remain paralyzed from the waist down. They selected a nerve, cut it and removed a tumor about the size of my thumb. I walked out of the hospital three weeks later. While in the hospital I contracted a virus that prevented me from focusing my eyes for about a year. To this day I believe that someone was telling me not to lose sight of that commitment I made when I didn't know whether I would ever walk again. This commitment hasn't been forgotten.

Our grandfathers were farmers, our fathers were farmers, but we were chemical junkies.

Starting over

When I left the hospital I knew the first thing I had to do was reeducate myself. I believed the information I had received at the university had led me down the wrong path. I started reading books like Silent Spring by Rachel Carson, writings by Thomas Berry, Wendel Berry and Tom Regan. The most difficult part was that my friends laughed at me saying, "Not only did they remove the tumor from your back, they removed your brain." Everyone should know the answers, they said. "Just listen to the experiment station, land-grant universities, Successful Farming and Farm Journal." They all thought that the future was in more herbicides, more pesticides, more hormones and more medication. I could not agree with this line of thinking.

I started to wonder whether the problem was just in my area or nationwide. Traveling all over the United States, I found most of the young university-trained farmers were doing the same dumb things I had been doing. Almost the entire generation of young farmers had been brainwashed. Our grandfathers were farmers, our fathers were farmers, but we were chemical junkies. The task of changing the way American farmers operated was like shoveling the tide with a pitchfork. I continued to try to change the methods that I was sure were causing our growing environmental problems.

When I talked to my banker about changing the way I was farming to a more organic approach he laughed at me. He reminded me that he was also the banker for the chemical and pharmaceutical dealers in our town. The money he was lending me was recycled through many other local businesses and if he helped me return to organic production those customers would suffer from the loss of my spending. The banker absolutely refused to help me go the organic route of farming. In 1983, unable to support the debt I was carrying with the type of farming I was doing, I sold most of my farm, but I didn't change the commitment I had made while in the hospital.

I spent several years working with farmers and ranchers in the early '80s on the mounting problems associated with nonsustainable production. In 1987 I had the chance to go to Washington, D.C., and work for farmers as a lobbyist on Capitol Hill. In the five years I worked with Congress, I learned what is known as the Golden Rule: Those who have the gold make the rules.

When I'm asked whether all members of Congress are in the back pocket of special interests, I reply, "Not all, but almost all chairmen or subcommittee chairmen are totally beholden to big money interests." In my opinion, the game in Washington is totally rigged by the special interests. If the American public ever thinks they will have any of their problems solved by Congress, they are smoking California's number one crop.

A vegan convert

In 1992, I told my friends that I was leaving Washington. They all laughed and asked me who I was going to lobby—the American public? I told them that there was only one word that brought fear into the hearts of elected politicians and that word was unemployment—theirs. Only the voting public could instill that kind of fear. I wanted to work where I could make a difference.

My re-education opened my eyes to many issues I never thought had anything to do with the problem as I perceived it in 1979. The issue of diet and animal suffering did not become clear to me until I had digested many new books. John Robbins' Diet For a New America and Jeremy Rifkin's Beyond Beef forced me to expand my ideas about the big picture. The brainwashing I had received from a very early age had closed my eyes to some big problems, even though I had worked with them every day. I professed to love animals, but I was loving them to death. My diet was well on the way to killing me while I was encouraging other people to make the same mistakes I was making. When I finally worked up the courage to confront myself with the facts about my diet and use of animals, I wasn't sure I could admit that my lifestyle had been wrong for years. Making this admission to a lifetime of friends and family was one of the most difficult things I have ever had to do. Today, I'm proud to say no animal has to die for me to live.

I was able to see that the way we were producing food was causing most of our environmental problems. Those problems made me commit myself to the task of informing the consumers in the hope that we can correct the problem before it is too late. We use more pesticides today than at any other time in history, and we are losing a greater percentage of the crops. It's not what we know that is getting us in trouble, but what we "know" that isn't so. We are believing the siren call of the public relations pitchman, and it is leading us to an environmental disaster.

The global dimension

There have never been more people on Earth. There have never been more cows on Earth, nor pigs, nor chickens. At the same time, however, there has never been less clean water on Earth. There has never been less available top soil, nor fewer fish nor fewer mature trees. There has never been less cause for optimism for the future of the human race. Our natural resources are disappearing at an unbelievable rate, and our so-called "leaders" offer only cosmetic solutions. Earth's population calls for more of everything, while Earth demands time to recover from years of abuse.

The Brazilian rain forest is being destroyed to provide pasture for cattle. If this destruction continues at its present pace, this rain forest will disappear within our children's lifetime. Every five years we lose enough acreage from this forest to equal the size of France. It is called the "lungs of the world" by some, yet we are turning it into a desert. When we review history, we find that the Romans referred to the great forests of Africa, and today we know this area as the Sahara Desert. How do you like the sound of "the Amazon Desert"? Not only the Brazilian rain forest is under attack; many forests around the world are destroyed daily to provide items as frivolous as disposable chop sticks. This wanton destruction by humans cannot continue at its present pace and allow an environment that will sustain human life.

Food-producing soil is disappearing at a shocking rate around the world. Grain production in the great plains of the United States causes the loss of three tons of topsoil for every ton of grain produced. Worldwide today, one person in 12 is fed with grain produced in the United States, at the cost of precious top soil. Haiti is a country almost completely denuded of trees and topsoil, and now the Haitian population is expected to double within 20 years. In the last 40 years, China has lost cropland acreage equal to the size of all the farms in Germany, France, Holland and Denmark combined, while its population continues to grow. The list goes on and on, while superficial solutions are proposed by comatose national leaders. Earth has dealt with problems like this in the past. The solution has been to reduce the human population. We are running out of pristine resources to exploit, and the available options continue to shrink every day.

Human sperm count, in the time it has been recorded worldwide, has fallen more than 40 percent—20 percent in just the last decade. The reproductive capability of many other species has also fallen at an astronomical rate in the past fifty years. We are like the people walking down the street while a car alarm blares, blithely expecting someone else to investigate the problem. Our rapidly diminishing resources should wake us up, but instead we are hoping someone else is minding the store. We are robbing ourselves of a future.

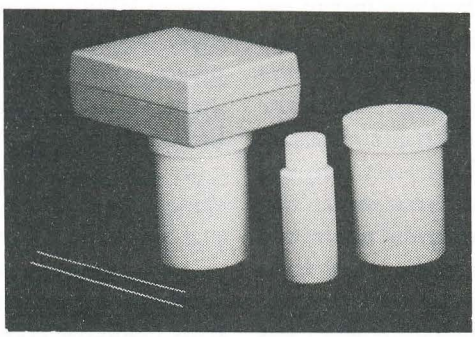
When we take the time to read the signs of the planet, they all say the same thing: "I can take no more abuse." The oceans are becoming a wasteland of pollution in which fish can no longer survive. Underground aquifers are becoming polluted,

MAKE YOUR OWN SILVER FOR PENNIES A BOTTLE!
COLLOIDAL SILVER GENERATOR

SIMPLEST: Just add water and supplied electrolyte, wait 5 minutes, check visual gauge--it's done!

PUREST: No salt or other impurities used as commonly done in other systems. Supplied electrolyte is self-replenishing and non-contaminating.

MOST COMPLETE: The generator comes complete with: fresh battery, two sets of large, 14 gauge .999 pure silver electrodes, one opaque generating bottle, one storage bottle, one bottle of pure self-reproducing non-contaminating starter, and instructions.



SILVER ELECTRODES are built-in, eliminating loose, uncontrollable electrodes which are consumed only in small areas and prone to shorting out the battery. This results in electrodes operating 9 times more efficiently, greatly reducing maintenance and silver costs while increasing silver production.

CONSISTENT: Make your own consistent quality for pennies a bottle! Your own fresh-made Colloidal Silver is better than store-bought solutions because there is no excess light exposure and no chance to lose its full electrical charge.

"OUR MIGHTIEST GERM FIGHTER...Silver is emerging as a wonder of modern medicine. An antibiotic kills perhaps a dozen different disease organisms, but silver kills some 650..." Science Digest, March 1978

"All fungus, virus, bacteria, streptococcus, staphylococcus, and other pathogenic organisms are killed in three or four minutes, in fact, there is no microbe known that is not killed by colloidal silver in six minutes or less, in a dilution of as little as five parts per million, and there are no side effects whatsoever in high concentrations."

and we lack the technology to clean them. Topsoil is covering the ocean floor, and we are left with barren, nonproductive fields around the globe.

World economists soothe the ears of government with theories of least-cost production and free trade solving all the problems associated with natural-resource destruction. These patchwork plans ignore the basic problems: What we are doing on the planet is totally nonsustainable. We adjust the pilot light while the forest fire is about to burn down our towns. The longer we fail to face the real problems the more difficult it will be to find solutions.

Our inability to return the natural resources to the soil causes us to mine the most fertile soil, and in the end we will find the added commercial fertilizer falls far short of the soil's total needs.

Nuclear waste disposal, clear cutting, rain forest destruction, topsoil loss, overgrazing, water pollution, waste disposal and air pollution are just a few of the explosive problems which we have failed to defuse. The survival of our race will depend on achieving solid solutions for all of these during our lifetimes. This is not a hope, it is a necessity.

I recently heard a lecture by Dr. Michael Klaper[1] who stated that the amount of time available to begin the changes to save the human race should be counted in months, not years. He believes we have less than 120 months in which to institute these changes or it will be too late. I believe he is overestimating the time left. A ship the size of Earth cannot change course quickly—especially with an unaware and careless crew.

Saving the planet starts at home—in the kitchen

The most dangerous implement in the arsenal of the human race today is the table fork. We have difficulty convincing ourselves of its importance; instead, we hope for a scientific breakthrough that will allow us to indulge ourselves and save our race at the same time. I believe this breakthrough will never occur despite how hard we pray. Common sense tells us when we work with nature we restore our environment and improve the health of not only the Earth but ourselves. The prescription for health of all concerned is an organic plant-based diet.

There are many interconnected problems, but the most significant is the consumption of animal products. Mountains of animal manure, polluted water, overgrazing, rain-forest destruction, human health, animal suffering, human hunger, soil loss and global warming can all be attributed to the human consumption of animal products. Time-wasting debates can continue as long as money exists to buy phony studies that cloud the issue, but the facts remain: We cannot survive on this planet in our present numbers if we continue to consume current amounts of animal products.

In my lifetime, I have seen animal production in the United States explode from rural family farms to factory farming. The size of this type of production is mind boggling: chicken operations with millions of birds and beef feedlots with more than fifty thousand animals. The waste and disease in these operations are monumental.[2]

We are also skating on very thin ice by limiting genetic varieties within our animal and plant species. This reduction of the gene pool is a time bomb waiting to explode just as it did in the mid-'80s when a scant three different varieties of corn accounted for most U.S. corn production. Each of them was vulnerable to the same diseases, and, as a result, the majority of the crop failed.

The ability of pests and disease to exploit genetic weaknesses will always be the Achilles heel of the human food supply. Most species have survived as long as they have because of the great variety in each, yet this diversity is being reduced at an alarming rate. Modern agriculture has reduced the number of grain species from several thousand to less than a hundred. This example is being repeated over and over. Every time we become involved in a new area of agriculture we select a few varieties and then combine them, believing we know more than Nature. In every instance we fail to maintain the genetic pool in case our plan has a flaw.

Not hopeless . . . yet

Unless we learn to live within our bioregion and face the basic problems of the interaction of all of Earth's life forms, we are a species bound for extinction. Every trainload of corn shipped from Iowa farms to animal feedlots in Texas produces about a trainload of manure. The cost of shipping this manure back to Iowa is prohibitive, so the soil-enhancing manure ends up in a pile in Texas while the farmers of Iowa must purchase commercial fertilizers to repeat the cycle again and again.

Our inability to return the natural resources to the soil causes us to mine the most fertile soil, and in the end we will find the added commercial fertilizer falls far short of the soil's total needs. This type of production happens all around the world every time we ship products outside of local bioregions. We must not only recognize the problem, but make "living the solution" an everyday habit of all who reside on planet Earth. We can make this change if we begin with a commitment to our diet. This will be very difficult for some, but it's mandatory for us all if we plan for our children and grandchildren to survive.

Although the future appears bleak, there are actions we can take. The sooner we start, the sooner we may reverse the existing trends. How we spend our money and select our diet are the most important decisions we can make. The future can be changed, but only if we start with ourselves.

MICROWAVE MADNESS

THE EFFECTS OF MICROWAVE APPARATUS ON FOOD AND HUMANS

by William P. Kopp

Microwave cooking ovens were originally researched and developed by German scientists to support mobile operations during the invasion of the Soviet Union. Had they perfected electronic equipment to prepare meals on a mass scale, the Nazis could have eliminated the logistical problems connected with cooking fuels while producing edible products in far less time than they could using traditional campfires.

After the war, the Allies discovered the medical research and documentation concerning these apparatuses. The papers and experimental microwave equipment were transferred to the U.S. War Department and classified for reference and scientific investigation. The Soviet Union also retrieved some of the devices and began to experiment on them separately.

The Russians—who have done the most diligent research into the biological effects of microwave ovens—have outlawed their use and issued an international warning about the biological and environmental damage that can result from the use of this and similar-frequency electronic apparatus.

The Russians—who have done the most diligent research into the biological effects of microwave ovens—have outlawed their use...

Medical research summary

The most significant German research concerned with the biological effects of microwaves was done at the Humboldt-Universitat zu Berlin in 1942-43, during the Barbarossa military campaign. Beginning in 1957 and continuing up to the present, Russian studies in the field have been conducted at the Institute of Radio Technology.

In most research, the foods were exposed to microwave propagation at an energy potential of 100 kilowatts per cubic centimeter per second, to the point considered acceptable for sanitary, normal ingestion.

The observations made by the German and Russian microwave researchers will be presented here in three categories: cancer-causing effects, destruction of nutritive value and biological effects of direct exposure of humans to microwave emissions.

1. MICROWAVED FOODS CAUSE TUMORS

The following effects have been observed when foods are subjected to microwave emissions.

Effects on the foods themselves:

Meats: Heating prepared meats sufficiently to insure sanitary ingestion creates d-nitrosodiethanolamine, a well-known cancer-causing agent.

Proteins: Active-protein, biomolecular compounds are destabilized.

Increase in radioactivity: A "binding effect" between the microwaved food and any atmospheric radioactivity is created, causing a marked increase in the amount of alpha and beta particle saturation in the food.

Milk and cereals: Cancer-causing agents are created in the protein-hydrolysate compounds in milk and cereal grains.

Frozen foods: Microwaves used to thaw frozen foods alter the catabolism (breakdown) of the glucoside and galactoside elements.[1]

Vegetables: Even extremely brief exposures of raw, cooked or frozen vegetables to microwaves alter alkaloid[2] catabolism.

Resulting effects on the human body:

Digestive system: The unstable catabolism of microwaved foods alters their elemental food substances, causing disorders in the digestive system.

Lymphatic system: Due to chemical alterations within food substances, malfunctions occur in the lymphatic system, causing a degeneration of the body's ability to protect itself against certain forms of neoplastics (cancerous growths).

Blood: A higher-than-normal percentage of cancerous cells in blood serum (cytomas) can been seen in subjects ingesting microwaved foods.

Their residual magnetism effect can render the psychoneural-receptor components of the brain more subject to influence by artificially induced, microwave-radio-frequency fields from transmission stations and TV relay networks.

Free radicals: Certain trace-mineral molecular formations in plant substances—in particular, raw-root vegetables—form cancer-causing free radicals.

Increased incidence of stomach and intestinal cancers: A statistically higher percentage of cancerous growths result in these organs, plus a generalized breakdown of the peripheral cellular tissues and a gradual degeneration of digestive and excretory functions.

2. MICROWAVES REDUCE FOOD VALUE

Microwave exposure caused significant decreases in the nutritive value of all foods studied. The following are the most important findings to date.

Vitamins and minerals made useless: In every food tested, the bioavailability[3] of the following vital nutrients decreased: vitamin B complex, vitamins C and E, essential minerals and lipotropics.

Vital-energy fields devastated: The vital-energy-field content of all tested foods dropped 60 to 90 percent.

Digestibility of fruits and vegetables reduced: Microwaving lowers the metabolic behavior and integration-process capability of alkaloids, glucosides, alactosides and nitrilosides.[4]

Meat proteins worthless: It destroys the nutritive value of nucleoproteins[5] in meats.

All foods damaged: It greatly accelerates the structural disintegration of all foods tested.

3. BIOLOGICAL EFFECTS OF MICROWAVES

Exposure to microwave emissions also has a negative effect upon the general biological welfare of humans. This was not discovered until the Russians experimented with highly sophisticated equipment and discovered that humans can be adversely affected without even ingesting the foods that have been subjected to microwave radiation. Merely entering the energy field of the food causes such harmful side effects that the Soviets outlawed all such microwave apparatus in 1976.

Here are the effects observed in humans having "direct" exposure to microwaves, that is, without their having consumed the irradiated food substances—

Life-energy field breakdown: Persons near microwave ovens in operation experience a breakdown in their life-energy fields which increases relative to the length of exposure.

Cellular energy decreases: The cellular-voltage parallels of individuals using the apparatus degenerate—especially in their blood and lymphatic serums.

Destabilized metabolism: The external-energy activated potentials of food utilization are both destabilized and degenerated.

Cell damage: Internal cellular-membrane potentials during catabolic processes into the blood serum from the digestive process degenerate and destabilize.

Brain circuitry destruction: Electrical impulses in the junction potentials of the cerebrum degenerate and break down.

Nervous system: Nerve/electrical circuits degenerate and break down while energy-field symmetry is lost in the neuro-plexuses (nerve centers) in both the front and rear of the central and autonomic nervous systems.

Loss of bioelectric strength: The bioelectric strengths within the ascending reticular[6] activating system (the system which controls the function of waking consciousness) go out of balance and lose their proper circuiting.

Loss of vital energies: Humans, animals and plants located within a 500-meter radius of the equipment in operation suffer a long-term, cumulative loss of vital energies.

Nervous and lymphatic systems damage: Long-lasting residual magnetic "deposits" become located throughout the nervous system and lymphatic system.

Hormone imbalances: The production of hormones and the maintenance of hormonal balance in both males and females becomes destabilized and interrupted.

Announcing: The Great Perceptions

"I Got the Microwave Madness zzzap zzap Message" Contest

Lóòk, we all know how seductive those meal-in-a-minute gadgets can be—even for people who know better. We have to either get rid of them or turn them into something truly useful (with no side effects) or risk succumbing to their radioactive charms.

Since most Perceptions readers are inventive and abhor waste, many may not want to just throw out their microwave ovens, so we're seeking the best nonviolent use of these UVN (ultraviolent) rays.

THE CONCEPT AND RULES ARE VERY SIMPLE:

1. To qualify you must be a former microwave user (better yet, a never-user). "Former" can mean as of right now.
2. You can prove this by writing on a piece of paper, "I have used a microwave oven for the last time" or "I have never used one, and I'm never going to start!" (Note: Eating food that someone else has "nuked" to cook/defrost/ reheat it also constitutes "using"; this is not limited to the actual button-pushers and includes restaurant dining.)
3. Add your name and address (and/or phone number) to the paper. We need these to contact winners. Using a post office box is acceptable (we do understand). You may enter anonymously, but if you include no address or phone, we can't send you your prize.
4. On the same paper, complete this sentence in 25 words or less: The best thing to do with a discarded microwave oven is . . . (While we wish to place no limits on your creative ways to reincarnate one of these misconceived inventions into something useful, we reserve our right to disqualify any that are obscene or excessively violent in our estimation.) Multiple entries are OK.
5. Mail your entry to: Microwave Contest, Perceptions magazine, c/o 10736 Jefferson Blvd., Suite 502, Culver City, California (90230).

All entries must be postmarked by midnight, August 31, 1996. Results will be published in our Nov/Dec 1996 issue.

Prizes

for the best suggestion:

Grand Prize: a lifetime subscription to Perceptions.

Five First Prizes: a three-year subscription.

10 Second Prizes: a one-year subscription.

20 Third Prizes: your choice of any video or audio tape from the Perceptions "Catalog of Options."

Brainwave disruptions: Levels of disturbance in alpha-, delta- and theta-wave signal patterns are markedly higher than normal.

Psychological disorders: Because of the disarranged brain waves, negative psychological effects also result. These include loss of memory and the ability to concentrate, suppressed emotional threshold, deceleration of intellective processes and interruptive sleep episodes in a statistically higher percentage of individuals subjected to continual range-emission field effects of microwave apparatus, from either cooking apparatus or transmission stations.

POTENTIAL USE IN MIND CONTROL

Due to the creation of random, residual magnetic deposits and binding within the biological systems of the body (nervous and lymphatic systems damage) which can ultimately affect the neurological systems (primarily the brain and nerve centers), longer-term depolarization of tissue neuroelectronic circuits can result.

Because these effects can cause virtually irremissible damage to the neuroelectrical integrity of the various components of the nervous system,[7] ingestion of microwaved foods is clearly contraindicated in all respects.

Their residual magnetism effect can render the psychoneural-receptor components of the brain more subject to influence by artificially induced, microwave-radio-frequency fields from transmission stations and TV relay networks.

Soviet neuropsychologists at Uralyera and Novosibirsk[8] have theorized the possibility of psychotelemetric influence (i.e., affecting human behavior by transmitting radio signals at controlled frequencies), causing subjects to comply—involuntarily and subliminally—with commands received through microwave transmissions acting upon their psychological energy fields.

For this reason, and due to the 28 other contraindications listed above, the use of microwave apparatus in any form is definitely ill-advised. Present scientific opinion in many countries clearly opposes them, as exemplified by the mentioned Soviet ban.

ANNOUNCING THE 14TH ANNUAL

Global Sciences Congress

— A Multi-focus Conference —

WITH UNIQUE INFORMATION ON MANY FACETS OF HEALTH

(PHYSICAL, MENTAL, SPIRITUAL, METAPHYSICAL, FINANCIAL AND POLITICAL)

RED LION HOTEL, 3203 QUEBEC, DENVER, CO — AUGUST 8–12, 1996

From nutrition to UFOs and free energy, with 24 speakers selected from more than 900 candidates, this con-gress promises to be again significantly ahead of the cutting edge in many areas of research, investigation, practices, techniques and modalities.

THIS YEAR'S CONFIRMED PRESENTERS INCLUDE, among others, in alphabetical order: Dr. Deborah Banker, M.D., CO; Dr. Bob Beck, Ph.D., CA; Al Bielek, GA; Alex Christopher, AL; Alex Collier, CO; Caryl Dennis, FL; Sharry Edwards, OH; Stan and Phyllis Irvin, KS; Peter Kawaja, FL; Dennis Lee, NJ; Barbara Marciniak, NC; Mark Phillips and Kathy O'Brien, TN; Dr. Alice Rose, Ph.D., GA; Delfina Rose, AZ; Dr. Alvin Stjernholm, D.C., N.D., CO; Elia Wise, MN; and Lloyd Youngblood, FL; in addition to 100+ exhibits.

EARLY BIRD REGISTRATION, $125 TILL JUNE 1 (First 200 get front seats). Hotel rates (before July 15): $60 per room with free airport pickup.

— RESERVE YOUR PLACE TODAY: 303-321-3333 EXT. 4500 —

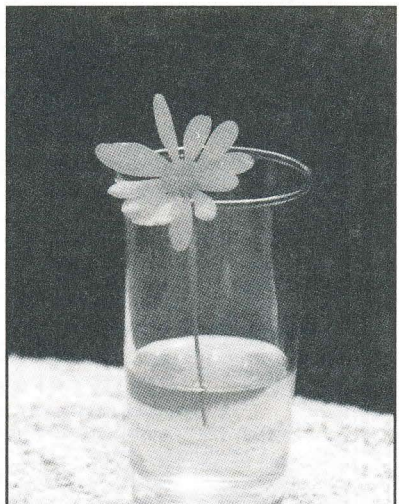
Banishing disease with three 9-volt Batteries

Part Two: Homemade Colloidal Silver Vindicated

by Mark Metcalf

WE USED TO think, and some still do, that life came from a chemical soup. Now we know that unless there is an electrical charge there is no life. Life, then, is electrical. And when electrical systems go, although the chemistry is still there, the life does not exist.
—Dr. Valerie Hunt,
Prof. Emeritus
Dept. of Physiological
Sciences, UCLA



Rejuvenated flower after three days in highly concentrated colloidal-silver solution.

In an earlier issue [Nov/Dec 1995] I wrote of a "hospital" that was safer than and in many ways superior to all others in its ability to promote wellness. It was essentially cost-free to operate and portable as a deck of cards: a colloidal silver generator. With it you can make virtually unlimited amounts of the highest quality colloidal silver for the price of water.

Currently, we the people of the United States are spending $3,700 per person per year to treat our diseases—the highest amount in the world. Ironically, our health problems are getting worse. Absurd as it sounds, the third leading cause of disease and death in the United States is now infectious disease. These deaths are completely preventable.

With the simple act of wiring together three 9-volt batteries, something very profound begins to happen: Ordinary people are able not only to heal themselves, but find themselves endowed with the power to heal others and to protect the health of entire communities. These everyday people's newfound power encompasses even the ability to heal animals, plants and trees. They are also able to grow more nutritious food and to store it for longer periods.

Losing their dependent patients, the multibillion-dollar, managed-care-of-"incurable"-diseases industry and the deadly, mutagenic vaccine industry begin to crumble. So does the cold-and-flu industry which buys all those prime-time TV ads.

Don't expect these cartels to take their losses lying down. They will do their best to frighten people away from making it themselves, sometimes buying off colloidal-silver manufacturers to act as their agents. You can also expect these drug companies to aggressively market their own substitute products, just as they pushed antibiotics in the 1940s when colloidal silver was first suppressed.

One of the most effective flimflam ploys involves trotting out an "expert" who confirms that the product he or she is selling is absolutely essential for your well-being. This spokesperson will stress that his/her studies of the competition revealed that Brand X will very likely harm you. Actually, the expert is used as a shill to usurp your freedom of choice and dictate what you should regard as "health" and health-promoting practices.

Similar ploys have been used by colloidal-silver manufacturers, resulting in confusion and fear among those most interested in using it. We can best avoid manipulation by gaining a deeper understanding about different types of colloidal silver, production methods, issues of safety and usefulness.

First some basics. A colloid consists of minute particles that float within a liquid despite the pull of gravity. To stay in suspension, these particles must be smaller than 1 micron (1/1000 of an inch). When fresh produce is processed through a juicer, a colloid results in the form of a glass of juice. Drinking fresh juices makes it possible to consume far more nutrients than by eating. Because juice is the equivalent of a predigested food, the body can process large amounts with minimal effort and correspondingly better health results.

As a colloid sits, the larger particles begin to fall out of suspension and settle to the bottom of the container. To redistribute the contents, one usually shakes a bottle of juice before drinking.

Similarly, with colloidal silver, particles are pulled off a pure silver wire emersed in water by applying a low-voltage electric current which gives each particle an electric charge. Although this charge is long lasting, it is not permanent; daylight, magnetic fields and time will cause a silver colloid to lose its charge. This is referred to as "falling out" or "plating out."[1]

Note, while colloidal silver is light sensitive, it is not as light sensitive as camera film. Taken to the beach under the midday California summer sun, it will oxidize in about 10 minutes. Indoors, under ambient and artificial light, this would take about three days. However, that only means that colloidal silver should be stored in tinted or opaque containers.

Many colloidal-silver manufacturers claim that if the silver particles are "too large," the resulting brew will be injurious, but the truth can be found in many science textbooks. When current is applied to silver in solution, the particles that break off will always be the same size: 1.26 angstroms (.00001 microns).[2] This particle is so small that the next stop on the road to smallness is the atom itself!

Colloids are by nature the smallest particles matter can be divided into while retaining individual characteristics. Reducing a piece of metallic silver to a cloud of microscopic particles greatly extends its total surface area—and its healing properties—while deepening penetration into the body.

Because the silver particles are charged, they strive to combine with other elements. Trace elements exist even in distilled water, and when the charged silver particles combine with a specific trace element, the solution can turn one of a number of colors, like gray, yellow, green or brown. The element the silver chooses is largely irrelevant: Once in the body, the silver releases its bond in search of stronger attachments in order to stabilize its charge. Therefore, as the silver colloid enters the body, the original silver particles (about the size of 15 atoms) quickly pass through the stomach lining and into the blood stream where they circulate for about a week before elimination.

Yellow Colloidal Silver

Yellow colloidal silver is favored by most manufacturers, not because it is more effective than other types, but because it has a longer shelf life. This stability in solution does not automatically translate into smaller combined-particle size of the silver ion and the trace element. Some trace elements are simply more water soluble than others. Either way, particle size is a moot point: Freshness and density (parts per million, or ppm), not color, determine effectiveness.[3]

A disadvantage of the yellow colloidal silver is its bitter taste—unlike the silver-colored one. Also, the yellow solution is more difficult to make. When using a 27-volt generator, it is helpful to reduce the water volume to shorten the much-longer activation time the yellow solution requires. I could find no medical evidence that a yellow colloid is more effective than a silver one. Of course, you can create both for yourself and compare their effects.

To make the yellow solution, use a tall, narrow glass with 6 to 8 ounces of distilled water. Use no saline solution. The water will not gain conductivity as it does when a saline solution is added, so the process will take about 45 minutes. It will produce a concentration of approximately 10 ppm. Keep an eye on the color of your solution, or it will eventually turn murky brown and then black. If this happens, just throw it out and start over.

How To Make High-concentration Solutions

High-concentration solutions cannot be made by simply extending the process time.

As more silver ions travel through the water, the conductivity increases which begins to alter the process. The result is a time limit of about 15 minutes when using distilled water plus saline solution at room temperature.

To create high concentrations of silver, simply heat the water. For every 10 degrees that the water rises above room temperature (72 degrees), the ppm figure doubles: If 5 ppm resulted after seven minutes of activation with 16 ounces of water at 72 degrees, 82 degrees would yield 10 ppm, 92 degrees would deliver 20 ppm, etc.

You should not boil the water, but you will find plenty of leeway between 72 and 212 degrees (boiling). Also, do not use a teapot because of its calcified residue. A cleaner pot, like a stainless steel, ceramic or glass one used for cooking, will work fine.[4] Then pour the warm/hot water into a glass.

Zero Toxicity

The body's ability to process the tiny atoms of colloidal silver makes silver build-up in the body impossible. The Environmental Protection Agency's Poison Control Center reports a "No Toxicity" listing for colloidal silver. In fact, it appears that harmlessness is one of the attributes of the colloidal state, regardless of content. For example, examining a bottle of colloidal minerals from a local health food store, I noticed arsenic, nickel and lead among the 65 trace minerals on the ingredients list: If the particles are small enough, you can even drink arsenic![5]

Since the body has a vital need for silver—to maintain the immune system and to produce new, healthy cells—and since our blood is also a colloid, the harmonious way in which colloids enter the body may well make colloidal silver the safest medicine on earth.

Just to prove a point to myself, I made a 16-ounce solution of well over 250 ppm and drank it. I repeated this procedure four days in a row, daily ingesting at least the equivalent of 50 16-ounce glasses of a 5-ppm solution! I did not eat yogurt or acidophilus or compensate for friendly bacteria loss in any way. The only side effect was that I seemed to feel better!

According to pharmacist Ron Barnes, R.Ph. (Capitol Drugs, Los Angeles), this makes sense because:

> Many strains of pathogenic microbes—viruses, fungi, bacteria or any other single-celled pathogen—resistant to other antibiotics are killed on contact by colloidal silver and are unable to mutate. However, it does not harm tissue-cell enzymes or friendly bacteria.[6]

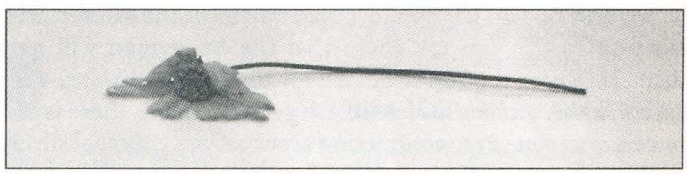
A Rejuvenating Elixir

My next experiment was a little different. I cut two flowers in the back yard and left one on a shelf without water for 24 hours. When I picked it up the next day it was completely limp. I made a fresh cut at the bottom of the stem and placed it in a glass of high-concentrate colloidal silver. Each day it got better. By the third day, the stem had become firm again, as if it had just been cut. Not a single petal was lost.



The same flower prior to rejuvenation.

I had placed the second flower into ordinary water immediately. By the third day, many of its petals had fallen; though it had been in water from the start it was already dying.

It seems that something in silver is tied to the very core of the life process itself. Dr. Robert O. Becker, MD, agrees. Writing about his experience with older patients, the noted biomedical researcher from Syracuse University and author of The Body Electric and Cross Currents said:

> Silver did more than kill disease-causing organisms. It promoted major growth of bone and accelerated the healing of injured tissues by over 50 percent.

He also discovered that silver "profoundly stimulates healing in skin and other soft tissues in a way unlike any known natural process. . ." and that it promotes a new kind of cell growth which looks like the cells of children!

These cells grew fast, producing a diverse and surprising assortment of primitive cell forms able to multiply at a great rate, then differentiate into the specific cells of an organ or tissue that had been injured, even in patients over 50 years old.[7]

A Broad-spectrum Remedy

The healing properties of silver are so wide ranging that we see researchers expressing amazement time and time again. Alfred Searle, founder of the pharmaceutical conglomerate, wrote in 1919:

> Applying colloidal silver to human subjects has been done in a large number of cases with astonishingly successful results. For internal administration, orally or hypodermically, it has the advantage of being rapidly fatal to parasites without toxic action on its host. It is quite stable. It protects rabbits from ten times the lethal dose of tetanus or diphtheria toxin.[8]

I received a call from a man with a Ph.D. in computer science who had read my original article, made some colloidal silver and applied it with a dropper to a chronic eye infection. He said the infection went away almost immediately. In passing he mentioned that the solution also got rid of the plaque on his teeth. I had been wondering what happened to the plaque on my own teeth but had not put the two together.

silver "profoundly stimulates healing . . . in a way unlike any known natural process . . .

The power of silver still reigns worldwide in many modern-day applications: Physicians use silver compounds in 70 percent of all the burn centers in the United States, while British Airways, Swissair, Scandinavian Airlines, Lufthansa, Olympic, Air France, Canadian Pacific Airlines, Alitalia, KLM, Japan Airlines and Pan Am all rely on silver-process water filters to curtail waterborne diseases. NASA uses a silver water-purification system on the space shuttle as do the Soviets. Japanese firms even remove cyanide and nitric oxide from the air with silver.

So, how do you frighten people away from the safest medicine on earth? You tell them that the bogeyman will get them. If they're too sophisticated for that, tell them they will get a strange, archaic disease like argyria. Actually, there is no record of anyone ever contracting argyria from colloidal silver made by the electrolytic method.[9]

(Argyria is a harmless and infrequent cosmetic condition in which some body parts take on a slight bluish cast due to the presence of chemical compounds of which silver is only a component. It did not seem to bother the royal, "blue-blood" families of Europe, who stayed healthy through the plagues of the Middle Ages by ingesting large amounts of silver.)

Surviving With Colloidal Silver

Were I to end up in the midst of a calamity, I would need only water to have one of the most powerful medical resources in the world at my disposal. (Technically, colloidal silver can be made in a variety of common liquids, including beer and soup, but I'm not recommending anyone do this in the normal course of events.)

In a remarkable clinical trial with 14 elderly patients, Dr. Becker inserted a pair of silver electrode wires directly into each wound, using the body's own juices as the liquid solution and applying current to the external ends. (The voltage one uses is so low it produces no sensation.) With this technique, he was able to heal infections inside broken bones—one of the hardest types to control—and to mend previously unhealing fractures and breaks.

In some cases he left the silver surgically implanted in the body. In others, he sewed the wound up around the protruding electrode. Once the wound had healed, "The implanted silver wire was easily withdrawn from the wound manually without the need for surgery or anesthesia."

Regarding the ability of metallic silver to control infection, he said, "All of the organisms that we tested were sensitive to the electrically generated silver ion, including some that were resistant to all known antibiotics." Concerning the safety of inserting it into the body, he added: "In no case were any undesirable side effects of the silver treatment apparent."[10]

Under emergency conditons it would be good to remember that U.S. silver coins from 1964 and earlier contain 90 percent silver, nine percent copper and one percent zinc, all of which are known to have beneficial properties if used in a colloidal state. Just scour the coins until they are clean and shiny. (I mention this purely as an intellectual consideration and not to recommend that anyone undertake such an action under normal conditions. Silver wire is much easier to use.)

What Doesn't Colloidal Silver Do?

It does not interact with any other medications or upset the stomach; in fact, it is a digestive aid. It does not sting the eyes. Medical-journal reports and documented studies spanning the past hundred years indicate no known side effects whatsoever from oral or intravenous administration of colloidal silver in animal or human testing. It has been used with good results under the most demanding health care circumstances.[11]

Without overstating the case, it may be time to recognize colloidal silver as not only the safest medicine on Earth, but also the most powerful!

Notes:

1. "Plating out" occurs when the metallic particles of a colloid fall out of suspension by either attaching themselves to the sides of the container or simply settling to the bottom. This creates two problems: First, when the solution is ingested, less silver enters the body because some remains attached to the container. Second, silver particles entering the body with no electrical charge will have more difficulty penetrating the stomach wall and attaching themselves to the cells of the body. Many plastic containers store electrical charge which can cause plating out, so nonreactive plastic containers, such as hydrogen peroxide bottles or tinted glass bottles, should be used instead.
2. CRC Handbook of Chemistry and Physics, 56th edition, 1975-76, page F209.
3. "Use of Colloids in Health and Disease." Dr. Henry Crooks found that silver in the colloidal state is highly germicidal, quite harmless to humans and absolutely nontoxic. In its colloidal state, silver may be applied in a much more concentrated form with correspondingly better results than in a chemical compound.
4. Never use aluminum cookware for this or any other purpose, however. The particles given off during cooking are highly poisonous, and such cookware should be banned from your kitchen.
5. Ameriflax (brand) "minerALL 72" colloidal minerals product contains seven major and 65 trace minerals including arsenic, nickel, lead and iodine.

The Global Placement of PYRAMIDS

by James Paul Furia

Recent discoveries prove the existence of high science in remote antiquity. From thousands of years ago there remains a display of advanced mapping, architecture and mathematics that far exceed our own. Including such ancient monuments as Stonehenge and the pyramids of Giza and Mexico, this discovery is called "The Code." This new information illustrates an irrefutable mathematical link between thousands of mystical and symbolic locations.

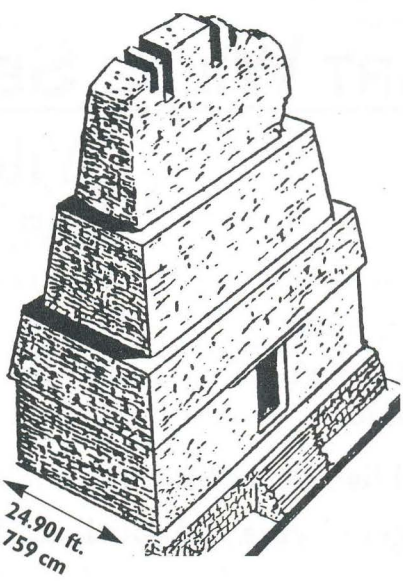
The math establishing these astonishing scientific relationships is now being unraveled by Carl Munck, a retired U.S. Air Force engineer and founder of a worldwide newsletter called "The Code." His work can be easily confirmed with math, maps and the monuments themselves. "Code" subscribers such as Richard Hoagland, author of The Monuments of Mars, and television producer Bill Cote (NBC's Origins of Man) provide history-changing validations of Munck's discoveries.

Being a music theorist and composer, I created a formula connecting music and sound to the geometry of "The Code." It seems that the ancient builders derived their complex system of global positioning not only from constant astronomical numbers and equations but from musical formulas as well.

"The Code" grid system should not be confused with the Earth power grid advanced by Russian scientists and now being studied by Bruce Cathie, Beth Hagans and others. "The Code's" exquisite math consists of thousands of equations.

Here are a few:

Stonehenge is located at exactly 51° 10' 42.35294118" north latitude. 51 x 10 x 42.35294118 equals 21,660. The ancients must have understood this location; they placed the 60 original perimeter stones in a circle whose 360 degrees x the 60 (stones) also equal 21,600. That Stonehenge was used to predict lunar eclipses is well known, but did you know that the diameter of the moon is 2,160 miles and that each of "The Ages"[1] lasts 2,160 years due to the precession of the equinoxes? Observatory Circle in Newark, Ohio, supposedly built by the Hopewell Indians, has a grid longitude of 113° 34' 56.2207183". The product of those three figures is a number exactly 10 times the Stonehenge "total": 216,000.



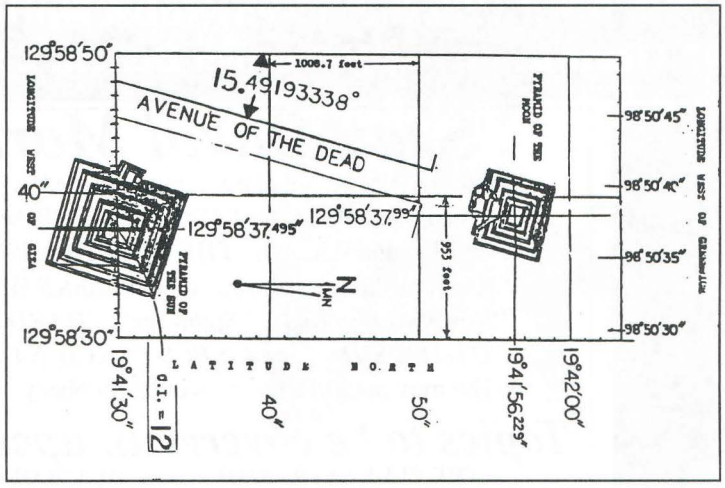
These little equations might appear to be merely neat tricks with numbers, but this process produces the same result with the Great Pyramid of Giza, the Sun and Moon Pyramids in Mexico, many Indian burial mounds and a myriad of mystical and symbolic locations!

All the years that we have been asking, "Who built these structures and how?" perhaps we should have been asking why and especially "Why are they located where they are?" Did a prehistoric Santa Claus fly his magical reindeer around the entire globe placing pyramids with mathematical precision?

As an example of another highly precise relationship represented by the positioning of such artifacts, consider this: A straight line connecting the Pyramid of the Sun in Mexico with the Great Pyramid in Egypt measures 7664.670744 statute miles (verified by the U.S. Geological Survey in October 1993). That happens to be a tangent value (press the "TAN" button on any pocket calculator) which corresponds exactly to the ratio between pi and the Sun Pyramid's center intersect (C.I.),[2] the division of the monument's latitude.

The proof of the galactic origins of humankind may be right here on Earth.

In Guatemala, the width of pyramid Number 1 at Tikal (24.9015 feet) is an exact match for the circumference of the Earth at its equator: 24,901.5 miles. Similarly, can it be coincidental that the angle of incline of the Great Pyramid (26 degrees, 31 minutes) is another tangent—of 67,800, precisely the speed (measured in miles per hour) at which the Earth orbits the sun?



This global matrix includes a pair of famous felines: The Panther Mound in Florida has a C.I. of 30 pi. That other celebrated cat, the Sphinx at Giza, faces an azimuth[3] of the same number, 30 pi. Incidentally, the Sphinx was recently redated to at least 6,000 BC.

More Coincidences and Accidents?

Who designed this master plan, and who did they expect to read it—some future race like us, or their own astronauts? Dare we consider that they might have been (perish the thought) extraterrestrials? Munck does not necessarily agree with me about this possibility; he leans toward Atlanteans as the architects and builders. So, let's look at the planet closest to us and see what we can find.

When the National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA) photographed pyramids and a giant face on Mars, their scientists unfortunately dismissed the possibility of intelligent life existing on other worlds. They concluded that these odd formations were natural, having been carved by Martian winds over the course of thousands of years. Yet, using the principles of "The Code," the longitude of the face on Mars is revealed to duplicate the distance from that planet to Earth at their closest approach.

By "coincidence," the Cholula pyramid in Mexico also looks like a giant face, and its C.I. is 13.15—the same value as the angle from the center of the face on Mars to the Mars pyramid's prime meridian.

How did NASA's "winds" know to place the well-proportioned face and square-cornered pyramid they were carving at a north latitude of precisely 19.5 degrees, the key number discovered by Richard Hoagland in his more-than-10-year study of a new physics (inspired by the arrangement of these Martian artifacts)? Those must have been some very intelligent winds!

Other areas to research include Marcahuasi, Teotihuacan, La Venta Cahokia, Serpent Mound, White Mountain (New Hampshire) and an abundance of other special places. I asked Munck in particular about the mysterious Nazca lines in Peru that I have been studying, but so far he has been unable to obtain the maps.

The implications of this data are staggering: The proof of the galactic origins of humankind may be right here on Earth. The thousands of pyramids, Indian mounds and other intriguing locations that "talk" to each other mathematically make it ludicrous to dismiss their connections as accidental. I urge any skeptics suspicious of coincidences in numbers or doubtful that the ancients could have been global architects despite their vast knowledge of the stars: Obtain "The Code" and read it. Then work the math for yourself. The most significant aspect of "The Code" is that, due to continental drift, its factors have reached their noted relationships in our own times.

To evolve spiritually we must realize our true past. Whatever the eventual explanation for these extraordinary relationships may be, they cannot help but improve our understanding of what happened on our planet thousands of years ago. Maybe then we will be able to nurture a more positive future from these seeds of truth.

RESTORING THE OPTION OF LIFE

by Dr. Sam Chachoua

HISTORY AND BACKGROUND

"SPONTANEOUS REMISSIONS" ARE AMONG THE MOST GLORIOUS EVENTS IN MEDICINE. THEY OCCUR IN VIRTUALLY ALL DISEASES REGARDLESS OF SEVERITY, REPEATEDLY DEMONSTRATING THAT NO CONDITION IS INCURABLE. SADLY, THE PRECISE MECHANISMS OF THIS WONDROUS HEALING PHENOMENON—WHICH UNTIL NOW OCCURRED IN A VERY FEW, FORTUNATE INDIVIDUALS—HAVE REMAINED A MYSTERY.

An even greater puzzle is how doctors in the cancer-research machine have overlooked and largely ignored such an important avenue of investigation. That is strange behavior for an industry renowned for exploring every avenue and leaving no stone unturned. How paradoxical that cold, scientific analysts should deem such occurrences "acts of God." Yet, this most important event, that can lead to the healing of cancer, AIDS and other ailments, has been categorized as a miracle and so left unstudied. Once understood, the mechanics of this event led to new methods of disease evaluation and elimination.

Induced remission therapy (IRT) was born from an intensive study of these events. I entered this field of research not for fame nor glory; not even out of interest or curiosity, but from a desperate need to help my dying father. Unfortunately, the answers and the maturity needed to accept them would elude me for several years.

The Early Years

Cancer was a formidable foe, yet the occasional healing independent of therapy suggested that it was one that could be beaten. Publications spoke of the possible awakening of a dormant immune system as being the curative event. Therefore, the answer had to lie in immunology, but, in years of application, immunotherapy (vaccines and other methods of immunostimulation) had repeatedly failed. One of the main reasons for this failure was found in the biological law of threshold inhibition. This refers to the suppression of immunological response when disease mass reaches a certain size. Unfortunately, by the time cancer is diagnosed it almost always has a mass that invokes threshold inhibition. Of what use then, is stimulating an immune system that refuses to be activated?

The answers that occurred to me were to search for a part of the immune system that refused to be inhibited or for an entirely new immune system. The observation of organ and organism resistance led to my first publication at age 19 and presentation to the Clinical Oncology Society of Australia. The logic of using immune responses from organs and animals resistant to certain diseases and not easily inhibited was supported by the various, associated, cancer-research centers and more importantly by clinical results years later.

Understanding this concept is simple: The use of resistant immune systems dates back more than a hundred years to when our medical ancestors, lacking antibiotics and other effective pharmaceuticals, would employ resistant horse serum to treat diseases as varied as polio, pneumonia, smallpox, etc. If the use of resistant animal serums was often curative in the plagues of yesteryear, why not employ them to treat mankind's greatest plague of today, AIDS?

1) Lymph Node tagged by fungal protein.
2) Intranuclear lesion in leukemia cell demonstrating genetic activity of Chachoua sera.
3) Lymphocytic leukemia.
4) Half the number of leukemia cells, following two hours of administration of serum.

The IRT protocol for the disease employs purified serums from resistant sources (such as horses and other animals that cannot be infected by the AIDS virus) as well as resistant transfer factors (small molecules that confer resistant abilities to the patient). This pure, nontoxic therapy has led to dramatic results and hope where none previously existed. The treatment is aimed not only at HIV but also at related infections and consequences of AIDS (pneumocystis, Karposi's sarcoma, etc.)

Delayed Miracle

An AIDS patient from Washington, D.C., was suffering from extreme fatigue, pneumocystis pneumonia and had a T4 cell count of just 189. His polymerase[1] chain reaction (PCR) virus level measured 88,000. Following two days of treatment he was much improved clinically and hoping to witness a miracle.

He repeated the analyses at this point and was distressed to find that his T4 cells had dropped to 126 and PCR had soared to 178,000, almost double the initial level. It was explained to him that this is common in the first few days of treatment; infected T cells are destroyed, releasing virus into the bloodstream with a temporary increase in PCR levels.

Repeating the blood test one week later demonstrated a rise in T4 levels to 989 while PCR had fallen to 630. His full-blown AIDS was in remission. His miracle was delivered—a week later than he had expected.

Many other cases have demonstrated dramatic improvement within days to weeks. It proved almost impossible to achieve similarly dramatic responses with cancer, however, using only antiserums. Raising an animal's immune response against cancer cells resulted in serums which would often destroy normal cells as well. The answer to this riddle lay in the cancer paradox, which we will discuss in a future article.

It also soon became evident that all tumors, even those apparently sterile, carry nests of organisms within them.

Cancer Therapy

Spontaneous remission always seemed to occur after some form of infection which apparently had specific affinity for cancer cells. I reasoned that infections must exist which affect cancer cells almost exclusively. There are organisms which specifically infect the lungs or the liver, for example, so why should the same not exist for cancer? I christened the organisms which specifically infect and destroy cancer tissue nemesis organisms.

In my search for infections with high affinity for cancer cells, I was surprised by their sheer number. It also soon became evident that all tumors, even those apparently sterile, carry nests of organisms within them. The explanation for this phenomenon also lay in the cancer paradox.

Use of dead bacterial or other microorganism fractions with high cancer affinity can mark the cancer antigenically,[2] drawing massive, local, immune activity that destroys the tagged cells. Plate 1, on page 42, shows a cancer biopsy:[3] In its original form it attracts nonsignificant immune response. Once cocultured with a fungus having high cancer affinity, however (as pictured), it can be seen that the cancer is now heavily marked by fungal filaments. These make it highly visible and attractive to the immune system. These crude filaments can be purified to yield efficient, safe, tagging complexes.

Plate 2, on page 42, demonstrates intranuclear lesions suggesting that tagging may be carried out at the genetic level to remove specific cancer genes. This leukemia cell would then yield relatively normal offspring. Since any cell can be specifically targeted, the implications are obvious for all diseases, including genetic, inherited ones.

Mark any target with extracts of an antigenic or curable disease such as a bacterial infection, and the immune system will remove the target. A library of tagging complexes provides an army of "magic bullets" to target and destroy disease.

The commonest tagging complex used by IRT is that of the staphylococcus; dead bacterial extracts are much like vaccines used today for allergies, but distinguished by their affinity for cancer cells.

2) Esophageal cancer with total obstuction.
3) Resolution of lesion following four weeks of treatment.

Anticipation/Dynamic Flow Therapy

Cynthia, a patient suffering from breast cancer with lung metastases, demonstrated clearly one shortcoming of the above system. She had responded beautifully to therapy, and her cancer had largely disappeared within five weeks of treatment.

We were both horrified when the cancer relapsed several months later and would not respond to the initial therapy. She required bypass surgery for a liver obstruction and was given a prognosis of a few short weeks to live.

Evaluation of the cancer cells revealed that they had changed and could no longer be tagged by the primary vaccine. This clearly demonstrated a failure in my cancer therapy model to that point. Using a static model in evaluating disease is a common mistake: employing a therapy based on the first presentation of the disease, then standing by helplessly when it mutates or develops resistance.

A model of dynamic flow and anticipation, however, allows the physician to predict changes in the evolution of the disease in its normal progress or following treatment. Whatever the modality, one can predict the changes and vaccinate (or develop other therapy) against them before they arise. This process also permits one to rally powerful immune responses against a manifestation of disease not yet in the patient's body, with the advantage that they will not be inhibited by threshold phenomena.

Anticipation allows the body to prepare for "the next wave" and destroy it cell by cell as it arises. Happily, this technology was applied to Cynthia, and she is alive and well today.

Crossing the Threshold: An Example

Immunotherapy for breast cancer is usually based on the preparation of vaccines from a biopsy taken prior to any therapy, so it is static.

Chemotherapy and radiation therapy are then undertaken to shrink the bulk of the tumor and thus relieve the body of its threshold inhibition. However, these treatments radically alter the disease structure and cause mutations that that bear little antigenic resemblance to the initial biopsy. That is, the vaccine made from the initial biopsy no longer bears any significant relationship to the new manifestation of the disease and will therefore fail.

Yet, use of the vaccine prior to "debulking" therapy (surgery, radiation, chemotherapy, etc.) is also doomed, since without debulking, the tumor causes threshold inhibition which prevents the immune system from "waking up" and utilizing the vaccine.

This seemingly insoluble Catch-22 is resolved by the processes of dynamic anticipation and tagging. Anticipating what changes will be induced by the therapy allows the practitioner to generate vaccines and other treatments against the resistant forms prior to initiating debulking therapy. We vaccinate against forms of disease that we anticipate will arise from the chemo- or radiotherapy, etc.

Prior to the debulking therapy these forms do not exist in significant quantities in the body, so at this point vaccines administered in anticipation of those changes will avoid the problem of threshold resistance, and a powerful immune response may be induced.

Following two to three weeks of vaccination, debulking therapy may be initiated; as the resistant forms of the disease arise, each new, tagged cell will be met by a hungry immune system roused to eliminate it before it was even born.

We can clearly see the benefits of dynamic and anticipatory versus static models in immunotherapy. The same applies for all other modalities of treatment.

Therefore, the main structure of IRT rests on the phenomena of resistance, tagging and anticipation.

1) Breast cancer and fluid in left lung.
2) Improvement after five weeks of treatment.

Legality of Therapy

Therapy is currently being applied wherever legal. Extracts of staphylococci with affinity are now under examination for legal registration in several countries as are the antiserums mentioned above.

Autogenous vaccines, extracted from the patient's own blood or disease sample, are the most specific form of treatment.. Such vaccines are legal in most of the world when manufactured well and administered under the supervision of an authorized medical practitioner.

Medical Doctor Offers Free Trial to 100 Patients

The International Institute of Curative Technology is organising a free, 100-patient trial (50 AIDS and 50 cancer cases). Patients who qualify must sign consent forms along with their doctors and be evaluated by a registered hospital or internationally recognized research institute. Interested parties should call (714) 962-4991.

To help with the cost of patient assessment, Dr. Chachoua will donate $10,000 to the hospital or institute that conducts the independent evaluation. Upon completion of the trial, results will be published in Perceptions magazine and medical journals.

1) Bone scan—prostrate cancer with rib and other metastases.
2) Clearance of ribs after three weeks of treatment.

The serums and vaccines can be prepared from stock or autogenously[4] from patient samples. Application can be made to virtually every disease condition.

Preliminary investigation indicates that it is even possible to vaccinate against the diseases of old age and to reverse them and even the process of aging itself. I will present more on this and explain the cancer paradox in the next issue. Some examples of the efficacy of IRT in cancer are demonstrated by the preceeding photos.

COSMIC TOP SECRET:

An interview with Robert O. Dean

• PART • TWO •

UFO DISCLOSURE VS. "NATIONAL SECURITY"

by Randy Koppang

In our Nov/Dec issue, we began an interview with former NATO intelligence analyst Robert Dean, who has broken his national security oath repeatedly to tell his story of the government's behind-the-scenes battle to hide technological breakthroughs and discoveries. Dean's Cosmic Top Secret (CTS) clearance at NATO gave him the opportunity to read the "Assessment," a highly secret report commissioned by the U.S. Army in the 1960s to determine whether the extreme volume of UFO activity posed a military threat to the nation.[1] The importance of what Dean has had access to and seen cannot be stressed enough. Currently, he is working with a team of other high-profile people lobbying Congress to officially recognize alien existence and excuse their breaches of "national security."

Koppang: History shows that it's unlikely the government will reverse policy on directly exhibiting crashed saucer remains, etc. (if any do exist). Yet, as you pointed out, "We the people" could consider it the ultimate infringement of Article I, Section 9, Clause 7 of the Constitution to continually research, retrieve and study evidence without publicly accounting for such expenditures of our taxes. If a billion(s) dollar "black budget" exists in times of budgetary "cutback," that's a lot of money.

Dean: In itself, that is unconstitutional—besides, who's cutting back? Clinton just added $25 billion.

Koppang: Yeah, to a military budget of $1.5 trillion.

"We the people" are the constitutionally mandated keepers of ultimate power in a system of which Benjamin Franklin cautioned, "We've given you a republic—if you can keep it."

Having had a CTS clearance in NATO, how do you feel we can reconcile the intelligence community's exclusive "need to know" with the public's right to share in that transcendental knowledge?

Dean: You've got another thing to consider here. You talk about the intelligence community. It isn't a solid bloc. The "intel" agencies feed on each other continually. The big fuss is turf and money. They are always vying for more power and more money. There has been a difference of opinion within the intel communities for at least the last 25 years on this subject: Should we let it out? Should the American people be told the truth, yes or no? This has gone back and forth heatedly within the communities themselves. CIA fusses with NSA [National Security Agency], NSA fusses with DIA [Defense Intelligence Agency]; it's turf, it's money and it's power.

At the moment, the decision has still been, to my knowledge, "No, we can't let them know." There are indications that maybe, at some level, a policy decision has been to slowly, gently, in a nonthreatening way let some of this reality out—these leaked documents, the fact that some big mouth like me is violating his oath and getting away with it. I've thrown the gauntlet down and demanded they come and sue me, take my pension away, put me in Fort Leavenworth, and they haven't. I said, "Look guys, if you do, I can subpoena witnesses, I can subpoena documents that I happen to know exist. We'll have a helluva nice case. We'll make a real donnybrook[2] out of this!"

Well, I'm still getting away with what I'm doing. How effective I am, I don't know. There does seem to be a gentle trickle of classified info, either being leaked or allowed to be talked about, indicating to me that somebody wants it done.

Koppang: And such leaked material—apparently bona fide documents or hoaxed to appear authentic—cannot be seen to reflect a consensus on the part of the intel agencies?

Dean: Exactly. They've been arguing amongst themselves for so long you can't consider them a bloc, debating, "Should we or should we not allow the 'profane' to access some of this info?"

Koppang: For many reasons, technological and perceptual, a "global mind change" is occurring! Throughout history, such changes in the collective mind of society create fundamental change. In our most recent times (the last 400 years), social and governmental change can happen when the citizens recall that, no matter how powerful the economic, political or even military institutions seem, they persist only because the perceptions of "We, the people" grant them legitimacy! At this time, there are substantial numbers ("patriots") refusing such legitimacy.

One of the major reasons for this is a perceived crisis of constitutionality (hiding covert programs lacking congressional oversight). Some of these programs have involved researching and/or refusing to publicly share evidence of a possible ET presence. Was the "Assessment" the ultimate E.T. research project?

Dean: I would not like to think the "Assessment," a three-year study, reflected the very finest piece of work that could be done of that subject. I hope that in our own government, at certain levels, much more thorough research programs have been conducted. I learned, after leaving SHAPE/NATO in 1967, that the conclusions of the "Assessment" had been known essentially as early as 1948 or '49 by our government, at least by the Air Force, after the crash at Roswell [New Mexico]. And Roswell was the tip of an iceberg. I know of at least a dozen crash retrievals involving bodies and survivors besides Roswell.

Our government knew in 1949 essentially the same thing that SHAPE published in 1964, but they kept it at the highest-level classification, didn't share it with anybody, didn't share it with our NATO allies. That's why the Air Marshall and General Lymon Lemnitzer had to conduct the "Assessment" in house, from 1961 to '64. They could get nothing from London and Washington on the subject. We knew some of these things that early!

I hope a thorough evaluation of [the E.T. presence] has been done and will be shared with the American people by their government. I've talked to people on the inside who say amazing studies have been conducted not only in laboratories, not only in research, not only in hard science, but amazing things have been learned psychologically about the human condition, the human potential.

Do you know there is an entire operation going on at Los Alamos involving "remote viewing"? And it works. We've got people who are trained, who can go into a darkened room, spend a few hours and return to tell what went on yesterday or this morning in Moscow, in the Kremlin—without physically going there.

We have developed techniques and technologies—knowledge processes—over the years that literally revolutionized old, traditional ideas of Einstein/Newtonian physics. We've learned in the science labs that the speed of light is not the ultimate, e.g., there are quantum particles.[3] How can you tell "the people" we've learned that minute subatomic particles appear to manifest intelligence? The UFO matter is simply the tiny, tiny tip of an iceberg which is so enormous that when the truth comes out, it's going to change the whole world.

A lot of government scientists and a number of government and military planners know these things. That's why many of them say, "Hell, no, we're never gonna let that out. The 'people' will never be prepared for that."

Roughly 12 years ago—and I've heard from a number of independent sources—they did indeed pull off a sustained, controlled fusion reaction at Los Alamos, using lasers.[4] In itself, this little piece of scientific knowledge can blow the world up in terms of global economics. Fusion means endless cheap power. Think what it could do to the oil companies, auto industry, steel industry and world economy!

Now, I'm making a point here: I understand why that kind of knowledge must be released carefully, shared carefully, or the whole damn house of cards is going to fall around us. We [could] have massive world economic collapse, starvation, riots, blood in the streets, etc. So I understand something that sensitive won't be released tomorrow. It's going to be released gently and carefully through the process of technology, probably over the next 30 to 50 years.

Koppang: How about the implications of E.T. craft maneuverability, what some refer to as "free energy," a self-contained gravitation-field propulsion system, powered by some unlimited energy source?

Dean: There's a lot more to it. First of all, there was a crash at Kingman, Arizona (about 1972), where we retrieved some bodies and hardware. The hardware was in pretty good shape. Do you know what the biggest damn secret of all was? They could not find a propulsion system in that ship! They could not find a motor.

What made it fly; what caused it to crash; how was it propelled; how was it controlled? To my knowledge, they never did find out. Maybe they have. There have been a total of 12 [crashes] that I'm aware of.

Koppang: How many crashes were mentioned in the "Assessment"?

Dean: Not too many. The "Assessment" was a military study conducted with a specific purpose, for a specific time, to reach a specific goal. [In] 36 months of work, they determined that, no, there apparently was no threat. The technology, demonstrated so repeatedly, was so far beyond anything we or the Russians had that, had "they"—at that point no one had any idea who "they" were—been hostile, it would've been over a long time ago.

[The "Assessment" recommended] that ongoing research be continued on the subject.

Koppang: Did it mention Roswell?

Dean: No. It only mentioned things they had access to. Like the case of Operation Mainbrace, a NATO fleet exercise which took place in the North Sea in the late '50s or early '60s. What happened was that a couple of UFOs flew over the fleet exercise, hovered over the aircraft carrier and brought the fleet to a screeching halt. Now, photos were taken and hundreds of men on the ships saw the UFOs. [The "Assessment" contained] photos of the Mainbrace sightings, pictures taken aboard the aircraft carrier of the object hovering a couple hundred feet above the flight deck.

Koppang: Public acceptance of an E.T. presence translates into a major step towards completing a "phase transition" in public consciousness and in foreign relations. What is your opinion regarding top-level movements in this direction, particularly from the U.N.?

Dean: I think there's a fairly decent chance the U.N. may do something positive on this subject. I talked to people who know Mrs. Boutros-Ghali;[5] I've talked to Muhammad Ramadan,[6] and his interest in it is pretty intense. Mrs. Boutros-Ghali apparently is quite involved and interested, though I don't know how much her husband is. I think there is a movement in the U.N. to open up to the reality and do it on the floor of the U.N. Perhaps that is where it should be done.

I do believe if this whole issue ever comes out the way I'd like to see it come out, that a multinational, interdenominational program is probably necessary, rather than a unilateral U.S. piece of info. I think this reality should involve every major religion. The Dalai Lama should be [involved]. This reality is gonna have an impact that's going to affect the world, so it's got to be international and interdenominational in its release. Everybody on this planet has got to look at this and not consider it a threat.

Koppang: At the end of World War II, America entered an ahistorical era[7] in which our previous historical landmarks, war for instance, no longer dictate the national will. Without a national will of distinct purpose, the government runs free towards imperialistic profiteering. As a result, authority loses its grounding, leaving the national will in a stagnant limbo.

The Apollo moon program and exploration of space should have filled this need, but they are going nowhere. The budgetary crisis is grounding them. Comments?

Dean: That's why we are reaching this crucial moment in "history," I suspect. This may be a given in the universe, on hundreds of thousands of worlds, where intelligent species reach this crucial moment, as we have reached it.

We've got thermonuclear weapons, biological weapons, particle-beam weapons, psychotronic weapons. We can't continue to live the way we have any longer. Now, if we don't make this adjustment, this coming to terms with who we are, why we're here, how we came to be here and where we're supposedly going, then we're going down into the abyss. It'll be the end of this species. It'll be one little footnote in the great galactic book: "Well, those people on the third planet in the little system didn't make it. They self-destructed." I think that's probably happened thousands and thousands of times.

I believe we're at that point where we either have to make it and get off the planet, go out and take our place in space with other intelligences out there, or we're going to self-destruct. And those intelligences out there are not about to let us come "out there" with our [war-making] baggage. They're going to keep us quarantined here until we self-destruct, or until we do come to terms with this new reality, this paradigm shift, as painful as it's going to be. And with hope, we'll step out into that vast community.

To me it's clear as it can be, but I don't know how to get this info out to the masses of people. A few others in this [effort] and I are trying as best we can, in our limited way, to do it. But we're at a crucial moment in our history as a species and as a race!

Koppang: In your discussion with these think-tank and philanthropic representatives (e.g. B.S. Wright Foundation, CSETI, Arlington Institute, Laurence Rockefeller, et al.) have such considerations been made?[8]

Dean: Oh, yes. They've come to similar conclusions, [but] they're at a loss, as many of us are, as to how they can bring [their] conclusions to the attention of the lawmakers, to those who make the rules and are the centers of power. That's why I'd like to see this done through the U.N., but I'm not sure it's possible, because the United States sits with its big thumb poised over the U.N. Any time the U.N. comes up with an issue the United States dislikes, they cut off funding—close to 60 to 65 percent of U.N. budgets—for years! Big money talks.

It's like what happened in the European Community [EC] Parliament not long ago. This was brought up, to make an issue of the UFO/alien involvement and establish a program of research in that body to deal with it. Guess who withdrew their support for that issue? We're [the U.S.] not even a member of the EC, and we shot it down.

Koppang: Oh, you mean the "European UFO Observation Center" proposal by EC parliamentarian and physicist Tullio Regge. He was commissioned to prepare an official report on E.T. intelligence for the EC Parliament Committee on Energy, Research & Technology.

Dean: And the U.S. somehow brought pressure to bear (via member nations) and stopped it.

Koppang: Based on your personal experience with and investigation of these "keepers of truth," how do you feel about those who believe they "know," or possibly even do know, the true history of the terra/lunar origin—including a possible E.T. presence?

Dean: You have asked many questions I have been giving a lot of thought to. Perhaps I'm focusing my anger and my rage in the wrong direction. [Perhaps] our government is not really that much in control and has never been. Like Disraeli[9] said a few times, people never quite understood that if the average person knew what real power and intelligences were behind the operations [of] national governments, they'd be shocked. Now, precisely what he referred to, I don't know. I've often suspected he was referring to the same thing Charles Fort[10] referred to and what William Bramley[11] refers to. What if—I throw this out as a possibility to you, and I don't have an answer for you—what if "the gardeners" of this little plot, the "landowners," the "landlords" (as the Carpenter from Galilee referred to them in some of his parables) are out there? What if the Koran is true? What if the Bible is true? What if the Bhagavad-Gita is true? What if all our so-called governments and our wars and our bloodshed and our savagery and the terrible history of the human race have not been at all what we might suspect?

We are indeed products and part of a vast, intricate long-term biological/sociological experiment. We have now reached a point where we can blow up the "laboratory," where we can eliminate all of the "trained mice," where the lab-experimenter, technician and director are now going to intervene . . .

I throw that out [to stimulate thought].

Koppang: Mention the book you've found so helpful in this area, and which substantiates Sitchin's work.

Dean: The Genius of the Few, by Christian O'Brien, 1985, published in Britain.[12] It's a masterpiece! It goes even further than Sitchin. O'Brien is a Sumerian scholar of incredible capability and credentials. He translates a series of cuneiform tablets dealing with the establishment of the first research center at Kharsag, Lebanon, on Mt. Hermon where the first "landing" apparently took place. There are historical records to prove that the Anunnaki—the first time they arrived—landed on Mt. Hermon, Lebanon, and they indeed had a hand in constructing that inexplicable thing we've got there called Ba'albek terrace (built with 200-ton stones).

As a student of history and theology, I've always been shocked by the similarities of passages in the Koran, the Bible and the Gita. This is not just a coincidence. You talk about synchronicity; it all strikes me as a part of a vast, intricate, intelligent plan. And when we come to this world, when we incarnate for our little prancing time on the stage, as Shakespeare liked to say, we're all players playing our roles. We come out of the wings, we prance across the stage, we rehearse and say our lines and [exit] as our time is over. The human life experience is just a dribble of time.

What if we're part of an incredibly vast, planned, purposeful, intelligent program of some kind?

Koppang: Creation, by any other name!
Dean: Where will you go with these ideas? And I'm not restricted by any preconceived ideas. I don't have an awful lot to unlearn. We discussed earlier the [respectably educated] people with all of the knowledge; they can't possibly begin to gain any true knowledge until they unlearn all the crap they learned before! I'm fortunately not crippled in that way, because I don't have a lot of letters behind my name.

Koppang: So, we can be true scientists!
Dean: You bet! I'm not what you'd call a scholar. I'm just a nosey, curious person who asks a lot of questions.

DARE TO KNOW

An Age of Enlightenment Ignites the Spirit of Revolution

by Ken Kalb

In 1749, like Atlantis rising from the ocean, European philosophers and scientists like Kant, Descartes, Locke, Newton, de Montesquieu, Voltaire and Rousseau were exploding establishment thought with brilliant flashes of consciousness. Kant declared "Dare to Know" to be the motto of the period, known historically as "the Enlightenment." Now, rather than blindly accepting the dogma of the church, people began to unlock the laws of nature and the universe for themselves. Individuals sought to know and understand God through their own faculties, rather than through abstractions or blind faith. This powerful wave of accelerated spiritual awakening set the stage for the American and French revolutions and the birth of the United States.

In that same year, in the dark abyss of deep space, slowly orbiting Pluto, the outermost planet, entered Sagittarius. Reflecting the most penetrating power for transformation within human consciousness, Pluto is the conduit between our solar system and the rest of the universe. Pluto in "Sag" brings to mind the New Hampshire state motto, tattooed on many hearts and body parts, "Live Free or Die." On November 10, 1995, one 246-year orbit later, Pluto once more entered the cosmic fire sign, Sagittarius, where we will purge and surge for truth and freedom until 2008.

The Revolutionary Planet

Approximately half way between the Sun and Pluto, unconventional Uranus, the seventh planet, spins sideways in relation to the other planets. Ruling the revolutionary urge for the freedom and integrity of the human spirit—as well as Earth changes, surprises and uprisings—Uranus, which means heaven, represents the inventive, brilliant, spontaneous and creative sparkle of the eternal Now. In 1749, Uranus "the awakener" returned home to the radiant air of Aquarius.

On January 11, 1996, after three 84-year orbits, Uranus once again entered Aquarius, the 11th sign it rules, where it will reign for seven years of accelerated evolution until March of 2003.

These two major planetary shifts now synchronize with an exalted metamorphosis in human consciousness. A new alchemy permeates the unconscious ethers and charges the air with surprise and promise—a lighter, brighter, more creative, innovative, spontaneous and illuminated energy—carrying the potential for quantum leaps in our lives and bold and enlightened ideas for governing ourselves.

Back To The Future

In 1749, Thomas Jefferson was six years old, about the age of the formation of the cerebral cortex in the brain, self-consciousness in the mind and basic values in the heart. Benjamin Franklin was flourishing in his renaissance prime at 43. Among his symphony of activities, he was performing his famous electrical experiments—inventing the lightning rod and explaining that there were two types of electricity—positive and negative. These incredible men, so infused with the enlightenment spirit, were two of America's principal founding fathers and two of five chosen to draft the Declaration of Independence. Franklin was also a framer of the Constitution and Jefferson helped draft the Bill of Rights.

Many people speak of the violet flame of Saint Germaine's enlightened spiritual vibration manifesting at this time, either in the incarnation of certain personages of the founding fathers or throughout the consciousness of this period. Infused within most of the thought, actions and documents surrounding the formation of America was a theme of spiritual revolution that is thoroughly analogous with our present circumstances. The Declaration of Independence embodies this spirit and served as an 18th century ICBM, preemptively striking the former power structure:

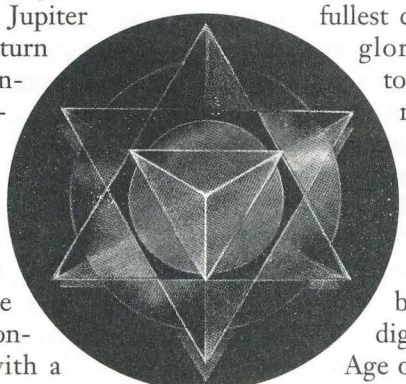
> When in the Course of human events it becomes necessary for one people to dissolve the political bands which have connected them with another, and to assume among the powers of the earth, the separate and equal station to which the Laws of Nature and of Nature's God entitle them, a decent respect to the opinions of mankind, requires that they should declare the causes which impel them to the separation. We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness. That to secure these rights, Governments are instituted among Men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed, That whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the Right of the People to alter or to abolish it; and to institute new Government, laying its foundation on such principles, and organizing its powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their Safety and Happiness . . . when a long train of abuses and usurpations pursuing invariably the same Object evinces a design to reduce them under absolute Despotism, it is their right, it is their duty, to throw off such Government . . . And for the support of this Declaration, with a firm reliance on the Protection of divine Providence, we mutually pledge to each other our Lives, our Fortunes and our sacred Honor.

This same revolutionary spirit is destined to reincarnate as this cycle reoccurs on a stage of far more complex political circumstances under similar, yet intensified spiritual and astrological influences. The time is dawning for top-to-bottom revision and rebirth in America. The O.J. travesty was a planetary demonstration of how far our criminal justice system has departed from its sacred roots. Ben and Tom never intended for you and me to need a dozen $500-an-hour liars (oops, I mean lawyers) to defend ourselves against the unlimited resources of the state. The shutdown of the federal government coming precisely when Jupiter (expansion) squared Saturn (contraction) is demonstrating how the monster we have created from our divine foundations has grown out of control and is working against itself at cross purposes. Do we really need a two-million-person bureaucracy with a $1.5 trillion dollar annual budget operating with a $5 trillion debt for self-government? You couldn't even count to five billion in your life if you started right now! Is this a budget even worthy of balancing? Or do we need to get real and start with a clean sheet of paper?



A MERKABA

With Pluto in Scorpio from 1984 to 1995, we dredged the depths and scaled the heights of terrestrial experience. Now, passionate Pluto in the sign of heavenly fire, Sagittarius, arouses the archetype of the phoenix, the Egyptian Bennu bird reborn from its own ashes, a classic symbol of immortality. With Pluto in Scorpio, we transformed from our darker urges; in Sagittarius our metamorphosis will now be engendered from our light surges.

Pluto and Uranus are the planetary archetypes within us for magic—that resonance capable of transmuting space-time reality into a radical shift in the collective consciousness. Over the next two years they connect in a harmonious sextile relationship from Sagittarius to Aquarius, opening a flashpoint portal for quantum developmental growth. From the acceleration of the Sagittarian, Capricornian and Aquarian New Moon planetary alignments over the winter, the Aquarian gateway has now opened, and the torch of a true new age has ignited. Henceforth, a powerful elevation from the darker depths of our human nature into the buoyant light of our divine dimensions promises to permeate the mass consciousness, manifesting in a quickening of awakening and spiritual revolution. The voltage in the cosmic circuitry is heating up from 110 to 220. The universe is percolating the alchemical ingredients opening the opportunity for the total metamorphous of human consciousness to its greatest heights, fullest compassion and finest glory—as we face our toughest challenges. Big magic, indeed!

I have called this process and phase in human history, The Grand Catharsis, also the title of my new book. Call it a paradigm shift, the Aquarian Age or a turning point, the polarity of this planet is changing. Just as a back has a front and yin has its yang, there is also a dark side to this shift, as one order and way of life gives way to another. The birthing process is usually painful and can have complications. The years spanning the entrance into the Third Millennium will be a wild, polarizing scenario of amazing innovation, unprecedented awakening, powerful reaction and catastrophic cataclysm. At this intense peak in Earth civilization, what crashes into ashes and rises from the remains will co-create a world of renewal and magnificence from the beauty of our hearts, the genius of our minds and the divinity of our spirits.

Most people I speak with are sick and tired of the massive amounts of money collected on the fruits of their labors through a complex, fear-based, taxation structure with little voice in how their hard-earned money is spent. A recent CNN poll found two-thirds of Americans saying their views don't fit into either political party, and that they would like a third alternative.

The First, Aquarian-Age, American Presidential Election

This shift into the Aquarian period is also synchronous with a presidential election year. America is truly a Uranian-Aquarian country with both an Aquarian Moon close to the midheaven, and Uranus in a most powerful, angular position rising. Of course, with Uranus, Mars and the Ascendant all in Gemini, we are very dualistic in nature—as though two distinctly different countries in one. Uranus should amplify this polar modality as it moves through Aquarius, reawakening the revolutionary spirit as the rift between the two poles magnifies. No matter what reformations transpire internally, I expect America to light the way for all countries into the Aquarian period.

Discovered in synchronicity with the American and French revolutions, Uranus is the ruler of revolution and high technology. The last time Uranus journeyed through Aquarius, between 1912 and 1919, we saw a time-warp-like acceleration in both of these realms. During those seven years there were revolutions in Russia, China, Latin America and most European colonies. The Ottoman Empire dissolved, giving rise to the current Middle East, and the Jewish homeland precursor to modern Israel was established. Also, of course, there was the fury of World War I and all of the realignments in its aftermath. This is also when the radio, telephony and television industries emerged, and aviation took off from Wright Brothers-style biplanes, all the way to the first transcontinental flights.

I anticipate the 1996 election to be the zaniest in history. Now the political game will be played almost entirely on the high-tech field. The new campaign tools are already in use: 600, 700 and 800 phone banks, infomercials, fax machines, audio and video tapes, computer processed direct mail, CD-ROM telemarketing, radio and TV ads and talk shows. The electronic campaign will also be waged in cyberspace, with the Internet and various other on-line services becoming drenched with politics. Since Aquarius rules independence, there will be many candidates besides Ross Perot wanting to run as independents, with many new third parties taking form. Triple-Cancer Perot is certain to pop out of his lavish carapace and claw his way back as a powerful force in the center of the political cyclone.

Organizations like the Light Party, Green Party and Natural Law Party should gain a lot of popularity with their enlightened agendas—but until they have unity, solidarity and money will pose little threat to the powers that be. A coalition of independent antipolitical parties that drops petty differences and adopts a united platform represents the only viable alternative—with many new linkages and alliances forming around a true spiritual vision of governing. Like the eloquent Alan Keyes, I expect lots of bright new lights flashing on the political scene. Does Bob Dull (I mean Dole) fit your vision of the enlightened Aquarian leader of the true new age entering the new millennium? Or will we need to elect a president so abominable that he engenders, fosters and ignites the revolutionary spirit by polarizing the populace—like putting out the fire with gasoline? The Grand Catharsis formula would calculate this as a strong possibility!

I expect the campaign of 1996 to result in: a diminution of the power of the federal government, a greater emphasis on local and state control, massive taxation revision, a tax revolt, state and regional secession and sovereignty movements and a challenge and beginning of the end to the two-party system—by an electorate who becomes disgusted and vomitose from it. The two-party system has run full cycle and become obsolete as it has put partisanship before patriotism, resulting in paralysis. This election year will be about its meltdown and the surfacing of enlightened new possibilities for the future.

Perhaps the Clintons will even step aside leaving the Democratic torch to Al Gore, who will select a minority, woman running mate. The Clinton Administration will get so bogged down in special investigations and alleged scandal that it will be a massive target for demolition by its adversaries. Sensing this vulnerability, his political enemies will systematically throw up their entire arsenal of garbage to try to drag him down. The electorate will get even further alienated and turn off and tune out. Abortion will still be a cornerstone issue in a party so concerned with the rights of the unborn, yet so willing at times to send armies to kill the living. If abortion is still a Republican litmus test, the party will disenchant too many voters to be victorious and will splinter. Unless he is indicted, Clinton's astrology and courtship of California still make him the favorite to win an unpopular second term despite all of his vulnerabilites.

The new money is also scheduled to go into circulation during this election year. Will this transition be harmonious, or will it stir the hot pot of old money issues? The big changes, however, should come in the 2000 election, in the aftermath of the huge planetary shifts, the unprecedented 1999 total eclipse, the new millennium and the powerful May 2000 planetary alignment—when Neptune is also in Aquarius, and revolutionary Uranus conjuncts America's Moon. What a vastly different land the world of 2000 promises to be! Is this when Mr.

Limbaugh will make his rush for the presidency, with the Newt as his dittomate? Perhaps the awakening will be so potent that even Rush will have his megahead rotated 180 degrees, thoroughly transformed by the illumination. By the millenium anything is possible.

The Law of Karma

When America was born on July 4, 1776, Pluto was positioned at 28 degrees of Capricorn, right where Uranus, the awakener, was crossing during the first government shutdown in November 1995. A godzilla government strangling itself is starting to resemble the shenanigans of the World Wrestling Federation, and most people realize something is very wrong. Throughout 1996, as Uranus moves further into Aquarius, it will approach the karmic nodal axis of America located at 7 1/2 degrees of Aquarius, where it will make three direct conjunctions throughout 1997. In February 1997, expansive Jupiter conjuncts zany Uranus, marking a historical flashpoint for big breakthroughs and inventions. This portends a scenario of various wake-up calls, breakdowns, surprises and creative innovations to jolt America back onto the track of the foundations of its divine destiny.

For the next year: Uranus in Aquarius, Pluto in Sagittarius, Saturn in Aries and Chiron in Libra, will form a Star of David or Grand Hexagram formation of trines and sextiles in fire and air signs—the radiant energy of a crystal or Merkaba. This will empower people to come together with fresh ideas for creative solutions and alternatives for new-paradigm politics. Radical politics will come back into vogue, rallying around the issues of governmental efficiency, constitutional reconstruction, a revised tax system and a greater say in how money is spent. With the Pluto-in-Leo generation of baby boomers (ages 40-57) assuming positions of power and the Pluto-in-Virgo (ages 25-40) sonic boomers right on their heels, the climate is ripe for radical reorganization from the structures of the past. This is when the shift will hit the fan.

Planet Earth is in a severe environmental, population, health and social crisis. The coming cataclysms will teach the people of this planet that we are all children of God in the family of man. Aquarian energy embraces the inclusive we vision, not the exclusive me *di*vision. The time has come for all peoples, all countries and all governments to learn how to live in peace and harmony, working together to overcome our common challenges.

Does a United Nations have the potential to bring this planet together? A female secretary general, perhaps someone like Mary Richardson of Ireland, could be the type of leader to uplift and nurture this structure into reaching this enlightened potential. Just imagine the General Assembly or Security Council as a sacred circle beginning its sessions with 30 minutes of silent meditation, prayer and positive affirmation. Miracles would happen which could transform the world.

The time has come to be part of an enlightened solution and to mobilize for the cause of our spiritual freedom and the quality of our lives. It is up to each and every one of us to create innovative solutions in our lives.

So, keep your antenna high and your ear to the ground for the magic of the new paradigm in the air. Get ready to align with whatever you find that rings your truth bell and perpetuates your life, your liberty and your inspired and vigorous pursuit of happiness.The true new age of enlightenment and spiritual revolution is calling you into its arms to live free or perish. The time is now.

Slice of T.I.M.E

A general chronology of the psycho-social, chemical, biological and electromagenetic manipulation of human consciousness.

1946

- United States enrolls German SS Intelligence officers into Office of Strategic Services (became the CIA). Gehlen flies to Europe; formally establishes the Gehlen Organization.
- U.S. government pertussis-vaccine expert Margaret Pittman and FDA's Charles Kendrick decide to test the vaccine by injecting it into the brains of mice to see how many survive.
- Werne and Garrow describe the deaths of identical twins within 24 hours of their second pertussis shot.
- Interpol reorganization meeting held in Brussels. First public use of the term "Interpol." Fifty years later Janet Reno, a member of Interpol, would be the U.S. attorney general.
- Rockefeller Foundation creates the "Foundation for Economic Education" (FEE) to promote "free-market" privatization by looting the productive capacities of the United States, forcing the government to do it for them, further bankrupting the government to force "privatization" and buying up assets at low prices. Debt service in the United States to international banks will soar, while destroying the tax base of the country. (World Bank, IMF)
- American consumer demand for heroin at its lowest point in 50 years. United States passes up the chance to eliminate heroin addiction.
- U.S. Air Force establishes "Project RAND" for long range research projects.
- Dr. Gerson demonstrates medical proof of complete remissions of cancer in more than 33 percent of his patients before the Pepper-Neeley Congressional Subcommittee for Hearings on S1875, a bill to authorize the president to wage war on cancer. Lobbying forces for surgery, radiation and chemotherapy defeat the bill by four votes. The bill supports research into dietary means for preventing and reversing cancer. Gerson's publications are blacklisted and he loses his license to practice medicine in New York.
- United States turns over two-thirds of German aircraft manufacturing to Russia.
- World Federation for Mental Health (WFMH) created. Because of its association with Nazi Germany, the term "eugenics" is dropped. The WFMH continues to support electroshock, lobotomy, mind control and similar activities. It employs many who were involved in such practices in Nazi Germany.
- John D. Rockefeller, Jr. donates $8 million to U.N. for a site in New York.
- Wave of "ghost rockets" seen over Scandinavia.

—Val Valerian

– All In – The Family

Everybody comes from two parents, four grandparents, eight great-grandparents, 16 great-great grandparents and so forth.

That's obvious: With every generation we go back, we find twice as many ancestors in a direct line.

Next, if there are, say, 25 years to each generation, 64 generations would span 64 times 25, or 1600 years. Looking back, that would take us to 400 A.D., just before the fall of the Roman Empire.

Now, if we run that line of two parents, four grandparents, and so on, back those 64 generations, we see that in the year 400 there must have been 18,500,000,000,000,000,000 (18.5 quintillion) ancestors for every one of us alive today!

Of course, this is impossible. It is not only far more than the population of the Earth now (let alone then); it is many times the total number of human beings who have ever lived. Something must be wrong with our calculation.

Looking it over, we soon find the error: We have assumed each of those ancestors was a different person.

This is not the case. That's obvious.

Actually, the same distant ancestor is related to each of us by many different routes.

We are connected to our relatives repeatedly—and to "strangers."

Every marriage brings cousins together.

If they look back far enough, any two people on Earth will find a common ancestor.

Whether or not it can be traced and discovered, however, the relationship is clear: We are all cousins, members of a multi-colored, world-girdling family.

It's time for a reunion.

NORML UPDATES

Congressional Hearings Invite Testimony

In the first week of March 1996, the marijuana reform movement took a step forward when Congress invited NORML Executive Director Keith Stroup and two other reform advocates to testify on the subject of marijuana policy. The Congressional hearing marked the first time that Congress has made such overtures in more than six years.

Testifying before the Congressional Subcommittee on Crime, Stroup urged ending federal policies authorizing the arrest of hundreds of thousands of adult marijuana users every year. "Marijuana smokers in this country are no different from their nonsmoking peers, except for their marijuana use. Like most Americans, they are responsible citizens who work hard, raise families, contribute to their communities and want a safe, crime-free neighborhood in which to live," he stated. "It's time we ended marijuana prohibition and stopped arresting and jailing hundreds of thousands of average Americans whose only 'crime' is that they smoke marijuana. This is a tragic and senseless war against our own citizens; it must be ended."

Stroup also spoke in favor of amending federal law to allow patients access to medical marijuana with a doctor's prescription and urged the members of the crime subcommittee to promptly approve HR 2618—a federal bill currently before the subcommittee that would permit the medical use of cannabis. "Whatever you may feel about the war on drugs," Stroup summarized, "denying medical marijuana to seriously ill people should not be a part of it."

Also appearing before the subcommittee to attest to marijuana's medical utility was Richard Brookhiser, senior editor for the National Review. In impassioned words, he told of his own marijuana use, with the full knowledge of his physicians, as a way to alleviate the violent nausea he suffered as the result of cancer chemotherapy treatments. "Because of . . . marijuana, my last two courses of chemotherapy were almost nausea-free," Brookhiser recounted. "There was only one problem—I had to become a criminal to do this."

Representing the National Association of Criminal Defense Lawyers (NACDL), Attorney Jeralyn E. Merritt of Denver testified in favor of changes recently enacted by the U.S. Sentencing Commission and approved by Congress, adopting a universal plant/weight ratio of 100 grams for use in marijuana sentencing. Merritt argued that efforts by some members of Congress to re-enact a 1000-gram-per-plant ratio for marijuana plants were not justified. "For Congress to step in now," she testified, "in the absence of new and compelling evidence that the [current law] is scientifically unsound or otherwise irrational, flies in the face of the authority granted to the Sentencing Commission."

Appearing on an opposing panel were Stephanie Haynes, president of Drug Watch International; Dr. Eric A. Voth of the International Drug Strategy Institute; D.A.R.E. officer Donald Hayes of the Alexandria Virginia Police Department; and Tom Hedrick, vice chairman of the Partnership for a Drug Free America. All four testified in favor of maintaining strict penalties for marijuana use and encouraged Congress to strengthen their antidrug efforts.

In addition, both Ms. Haynes and Dr. Voth voiced their disbelief about the efficacy of medical marijuana and disapproval of HR 2618. Ignoring that thousands of seriously ill patients risk arrest daily to acquire marijuana as a therapeutic agent for a variety of serious illnesses including glaucoma, cancer and the wasting syndrome associated with AIDS, Voth testified that only "the pro-marijuana forces [continue to] drive the medical marijuana issue."

Medical Marijuana Attracts Federal Bi-Partisan Support

On March 29, four additional members of Congress, including one member of the House Judiciary Committee, Subcommittee on Crime, and two Republicans, signed on to H.R. 2618 that would permit physicians to prescribe marijuana as a therapeutic agent for seriously ill patients. (See news clip above.) The signees, Reps. Joseph Kennedy (D-Mass.), Steven Gunderson (R-Wis.), Zoe Lofgren (D-Calif.) and Tom Campbell (R-Calif.) brought the total number of co-sponsors to 13.

Co-sponsor support is critical for various reasons: The addition of Reps. Gunderson and Campbell gave the bill its first taste of bi-partisan support and could potentially persuade other Republicans—including House speaker and former co-sponsor of medical-marijuana legislation, Newt Gingrich (R-Ga.)—to sign on. Also, Republican support is necessary for the bill to move forward in the Republican-controlled Congress.

Rep. Lofgren's support is also crucial. Currently, H.R. 2618 is pending before the Subcommittee on Crime. As a member of this committee, Lofgren can encourage chairman and former, two-time co-sponsor of medical-marijuana legislation, Bill McCollum (R-Fla.), to hold additional hearings on the issue and possibly bring the bill to a vote.

Introduced in Congress last fall by Rep. Barney Frank (D-Mass.), the bill would amend federal law to allow seriously ill patients to have legal access to marijuana for medicinal purposes. If it passes, doctors could prescribe marijuana to individuals suffering from "glaucoma, AIDS wasting syndrome, muscle spasms from certain spastic disorders, including multiple sclerosis, paraplegia, and quadriplegia, or the nausea associated with cancer chemotherapy or radiology." Currently, only eight patients nationwide are allowed to receive medical marijuana legally from the federal government.

Washington State Allots Funding For Studies

Washington State University and that state's department of health will start looking for ways to make medical marijuana available to the seriously ill, under strict controls, through two appropriations in this year's operating budget.

The funding for the study came through the efforts of state Senators Jeanne Kohl (D-Seattle) and Bob McCaslin (R-Spokane). The two senators co-sponsored a bill (SB-6744) that was used as a model for the appropriations in this year's budget.

The funds will be used by Washington State University, in conjunction with the state's board of pharmacy and department of health, to research the cultivation of marijuana in a tamper-free environment. The study will also determine the appropriate organization to manufacture and distribute the drug for medical use.

The second appropriation will be used to fund a clinical study administered by the state's department of health under the controlled-substance-abuse therapeutic program, a statute since 1979.

This study will be limited to patients under a physician's care. Only those receiving chemotherapy and/or radiation treatments, or suffering from glaucoma, AIDS or HIV-related illnesses, multiple sclerosis or other life-threatening illnesses will qualify for the study.

Results of a statewide, public-opinion poll directed by local political consultant Sharon Gilpin the weekend of March 2-3 indicated that the public supports the use of marijuana for medicinal purposes. The statewide survey of 400 voters found that 75 percent favored making marijuana available for patients if prescribed by a doctor.

Gilpin said the results were a complete surprise. "I know the people in the Northwest tend to be compassionate, but the high number was totally unexpected," she said. Gilpin said people who are concerned about the rising cost of health care are willing to look at alternatives to the high cost of fighting diseases such as AIDS and cancer.

"This is a great start that will lead to what we hope is a promising finish," said Dr. David Edwards, an Olympia physician and medical coordinator for the Washington Hemp Education Network (WHEN), an agency working on informing the public of the potential benefits of medicinal marijuana. "I expect the results to have a positive effect in our effort to provide organic marijuana to patients under strict medical guidelines."

Medical marijuana activist and founder of the Green Cross Cannabis Buyers Club Joanna McKee said she is confident the study will confirm what other tests have shown: the positive effects of medical marijuana. "The medical community is so focused on using chemicals to combat illness, they ignore a simple, organic solution that's readily available," she said. "This test will provide the answer to those who still question the effectiveness of THC."

Sen. McCaslin said that if the results of the state study on THC are similar to others conducted, organic marijuana could be a boon for the seriously ill. "It will not only aid them in their physical recovery; it could prove to be a psychological boost as well," he said.

Kohl said the study is the first step towards getting needed medicine to those who desperately need it. "If the synthetic drug is not working for a patient, it only makes sense they should be able to have access to organic marijuana."

Domestic Hemp Cultivation Bill Heads To Colorado Senate

Legislation (SB 67) introduced by Sen. Lloyd Casey (D-Northglenn) to allow Colorado to become the first state to grow industrial hemp in almost 40 years is heading for the Colorado Senate floor.

In a move that stunned proponents and opponents alike, the Senate Appropriations Committee voted 5-4 to send the bill to the full Senate for debate. A similar bill was introduced by Casey in 1995, but received only one vote of support in its first committee.

"We're talking about not just growing, but about the textile mills, the paper mills, [and] the food-processing products. We're talking about all the value-added things that can result from this," explained Casey.

The Colorado Industrial Hemp Production Act permits the planting of no more than 40 acres of industrial hemp (defined by the bill as marijuana containing no more than 0.5% THC) in Colorado in 1996 for agricultural, commercial and scientific research. The legislation allows for full-scale hemp production to begin in 1998 and has been endorsed by the Colorado Farm Bureau, the Colorado State Grange and the National Federation of Farm Bureaus. The bill has also received support from Hollywood actor and hemp businessman Woody Harrelson.

Working diligently over the past year to gather support for this bill is the Colorado Hemp Initiative Project (CO-HIP), a grassroots organization of activists who have donated their time to volunteer on this campaign. CO-HIP notes that the bill currently has support in the Senate, but is probably three to five votes shy of a majority. Nevertheless, the group remains confident that it will pass the Senate and is actively pursuing the help of farm organizations and professional lobbyists to drum up support among legislators.

Colorado's legislative session ends May 8.

New Drug Czar Proposes Massive Antidrug Expansion

In a move signifying a complete reversal from his previous decisions to downsize the Office of National Drug Control Policy, President Clinton recently asked Congress for $3.4 million in supplemental spending to expand its staff from 25 to 150 individuals. This money would be in addition to the extra $250 million dollars already appropriated by the White House to beef up antidrug efforts.

"The general wants some troops to command," explained one White House official to the The Washington Post on Clinton's sudden move to increase the ONDCP staff, "and Clinton wanted the general."

In addition to his title as newly appointed "drug czar," retired general Barry R. McCaffrey was granted a slot on the National Security Council. He also gained approval from the White House to bring 30 former Pentagon staffers to his new operation.

"According to the most recent FBI statistics, the federal government's war on drugs is primarily a war against marijuana users," explained NORML's Deputy Director Allen St. Pierre. "Clinton's latest effort to drastically increase the 'war' effort is yet another step in the wrong direction and a wasteful expenditure of valuable taxpayer dollars."

Vermont House Approves Hemp Cultivation Legislation

Montpelier, Vt.: On January 29, the Vermont House of Representatives approved by a voice vote a bill (H. 783) to permit the development of a hemp industry in the state. It received wide-scale bipartisan support the day before when the second reading was approved by a 108-33 vote. Gov. Howard B. Dean has spoken out against hemp cultivation, claiming that it would amount to legalizing marijuana, but the overwhelming number of yes votes would override his possible veto.

The Vermont legislation resembles a pending Colorado hemp bill introduced by Sen. Lloyd Casey (D-Northglenn) and would authorize the University of Vermont to begin researching industrial hemp production. A key aspect of this study would include growing test plots.

The bill is now in the senate. Legislators note that there appears to be little opposition to the proposal there. Sen. Thomas Bahre (R-Addison), chairman of the Senate Agriculture Committee told the Vermont Times he hoped to begin taking testimony on the bill as early as March 18. "We want to seriously look at whether there is anybody out there to buy this fiber and what its potential is to create manufacturing jobs," he said. "If it doesn't, then I don't see a need to go any further, but I do think this fiber has the potential to have land produce something that isn't producing milk."

Often called "marijuana's misunderstood cousin," industrial hemp comes from the same plant species that produces marijuana, but it has only minute amounts of delta-9 tetrahydrocannabinol (THC), the psychoactive ingredient that gives marijuana its euphoric properties. Hemp is grown legally throughout much of Europe and Asia and is used to produce a variety of products such as cosmetics, textiles, paper, paints, plastics and animal feed. For more information, call the Vermont Legislative Council (802) 828-2231.

Hemp To Be Planted On American Indian Soil

The Coalition for Hemp Awareness (CHA) announced that the Navajo Nation has issued a resolution allowing for hemp cultivation to take place on American Indian soil. CHA scheduled a spring planting to take place in March.

The Navaho Hemp Project began in 1992 when activists Jim Robinson and Tom and Carolyn McCormick moved to the reservation for the purpose of introducing hemp cultivation on sovereign soil. The trio was so successful in their education campaign that the resolution was passed by the Navajo Nation by a unanimous vote of 30–0.

Although over 30,000 acres of the Navajo Nation have been allocated for hemp cultivation, CHA's initial planting will be limited to a small seed bank crop. In addition, CHA states that the organization is close to securing approval for similar cultivation projects from 10 other tribes located across the United States.

The coalition was founded in 1991 to foster the rapid return of cannabis hemp as an agricultural base crop. CHA is a political-advocacy network group that assimilates and disseminates hemp information to both politicians and the public.

California Medical Initiative Heads Toward State Ballot

An initiative to legalize the medical use of marijuana appears headed for the November 1996 California ballot thanks to crucial last-minute financial support from a group of major donors. The new donations make it likely that supporters will garner the necessary number of signatures by the April 20 deadline to place the initiative on the ballot.

Initiative organizers were elated by the gift and expressed confidence that voters would approve the measure. Polls indicate that a solid majority of Californians support medicinal legalization. The current medical-marijuana initiative would guarantee the right of patients to use marijuana for medicinal purposes if they possess a physician's recommendation.

Medical marijuana has remained illegal despite growing acceptance in the health-care community of its efficacy in the treatment of cancer, glaucoma, AIDS, multiple sclerosis, chronic pain and muscle spasticity. Under current California law, anyone who cultivates marijuana for medicinal use risk three years in state prison.

The 1996 medical-marijuana initiative has been endorsed by the cities of San Francisco, Oakland and West Hollywood; the Santa Cruz and Marin Boards of Supervisors; the California Nurses Association; the Los Angeles AIDS Commission, the California Multiple Sclerosis Society, the California Seniors' Legislature and many other organizations and public leaders.

Twice As Many Defendants Imprisoned For Marijuana Possession Under "Three Strikes" Law As For Violent Crimes

March 6, San Francisco, Calif.: More than twice as many defendants have been sentenced to stiff prison sentences under California's "three strikes and you're out" law than have murderers, rapists and kidnappers combined, according to a recent study by the Center on Juvenile and Criminal Justice in San Francisco.

The report concluded that 85 percent of those sentenced under the law had been convicted most recently of a nonviolent offense. Of that 85 percent, 192 individuals were sentenced under the law after being convicted of marijuana possession while in custody (a felony offense in California) as compared to only 40 who were convicted of murder, 25 of rape and 24 of kidnapping.

To be prosecuted under the stringent California law, a defendant must have been convicted of at least one or more serious violent crimes in the past. However, the most recent offense need not be a violent crime — only a felony. The law mandates double the normal sentence for anyone convicted of a second felony and life sentence for any individual convicted of a third felony.

"People are going to jail in America for possessing marijuana," stated NORML's Deputy Director Allen St. Pierre. "As this report clearly illustrates, the sentences can potentially be for life. This sort of illogical and fiscally irresponsible mandatory sentencing must end."

DO YOU SUFFER FROM STIFF, ACHY JOINTS?

AVAILABLE IN TABS & CAPSULES

In ancient China, discomfort or pain in the joints was often thought to be caused by poor circulation or energy blockages. Pain was associated with and described as weather-like conditions such as Wind, Damp, or Cold. Pain that changed location or seemed to wander in the body was described as Wind blockage. Persons who could sense changes in weather because of achy joints had Damp or Cold in the joints. Hot or inflamed joints were said to have Heat in them.

Early herbalists recognized that certain herbs countered these symptoms. Through skillful observation and clinical experience formulas and treatment methods were developed and recorded. This knowledge was passed on through generations of medical practitioners.

Tung Shueh Pills are formulated to take advantage of age old herbal knowledge to improve circulation in the body. The word Tung Shueh translates as Circulate Blood. In terms of Oriental medicine these herbs disperse the energy and blood blockages which cause muscle and joint discomfort.

Eighteen special herbs are used to create this remarkable formula.

Tung Shueh Pills are made in the United States in a Class 1 pharmaceutical manufacturing firm. They are made with medicinal quality herbs imported from the People's Republic of China. Tung Shueh are labeled according to U.S. standards and have been tested by an independent analytical laboratory.

They are available in 500mg tablets packed 90 tablets per bottle.

Price per bottle $17.45 + shipping. Wholesale requests welcome.

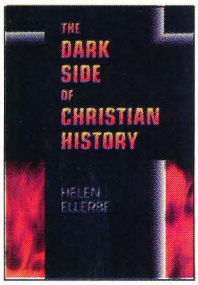
BOOK REVIEWS

The Dark Side of Christian History
by Helen Ellerbe

Morningstar Books, San Rafael, CA., 1995, 236 pp., $12.95



Without understanding the dark side of religious history, one might think that religion and spirituality are one and the same. Yet, organized religion has a very long history of curtailing and containing spirituality, one's personal and private relationship with 'God,' the sacred or the divine.

—Helen Ellerbe

I remember reading about the Dark Ages as a student at Immaculate Conception grammar school in New York and feeling thankful that I lived in a modern, civilized world.The black-and-white world of Franciscan nuns and priests taught that it was a privilege to be educated in a private school. By the time I began reading Helen Ellerbe's new book, The Dark Side of Christian History, I had invested many years working to get to the roots of my belief systems, which of necessity included challenging earlier Roman Catholic indoctrination. Nonetheless, I was appalled to see how pervasively such programming has continued throughout the ages and how "successful" its dramatic impact has been on politics, education, science, economics, medicine, art and history around the planet today.

The Christian church has left a legacy . . . that permeates every aspect of Western society, both secular and religious. It is a legacy that fosters sexism, racism, the intolerance of difference and the desecration of the natural environment. The Church, throughout much of its history, has demonstrated a disregard for human freedom, dignity and self-determination. It has attempted to control, contain and confine spirituality, the relationship between an individual and God. As a result, Christianity has helped to create a society in which people are alienated not only from each other but also from the divine.

With these opening words, Ellerbe unleashes her meticulous examination of an ignored side of history: a period of nearly two millennia during which the Christian church oppressed and brutalized millions of individuals.

This is a controversial book that will challenge many readers and provide stimulation to stretch limiting beliefs.

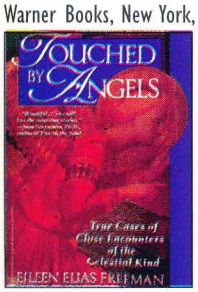
Touched By Angels—by Eileen Elias Freeman

Warner Books, New York, 1993, 204 pp., $8.99



Everywhere you look, there are angel music, angel calendars, angel books and angel newsletters, and you know it's just a matter of time before we see a best-seller entitled Cooking for the Angels: A Low Fat Cookbook For Your Guardian Angel. By nature I'm a skeptic, but along with the skeptic in me, there's also this person who wants to believe in flying saucers, extraterrestrials, prophecies, ghosts, psychics and, well . . . angels. So, if we're being invaded by angels, I'd better at least bone up on things. After all, maybe, just maybe, there's something to this angel invasion.

Touched By Angels is one of a dozen books on angels that are currently making the "must-read" lists for angel buffs. The author lays the groundwork, describing her first and only sighting of an angel, at age five, then continues with a brief but very interesting history of angels. Who are the angels? Why are they making their presence known so frequently at this particular time in history? Why were angels depicted with halos around their heads in early Christian art? Why do we see many winged children depicted in the art of the Middle Ages?

Not until A.D. 787 did the church decree (at the second Council of Nicaea) that it was lawful to depict images of angels in art. Since artists had no models to work with, only accounts of angels moving effortlessly through air, they turned to Greek and Latin art for help: Mercury, Nike and Hermes, gods with wings descending effortlessly from the heavens, were used as examples of how angels can do the same.

Ms. Freeman then shares personal accounts of six different people who had their own "encounters of the celestial kind." By the end of Chapter 11 I feel like I'm kind of getting hooked on angelmania. I think this is what Ms. Freeman had in mind, because the following two chapters are titled "How Do We Know We Have Been Touched By Angels?" and "Touching Our Angels." She concludes the book with a discussion of her newsletter, Angel Watch.

Overall, if you're looking for a good book on angels, Touched By Angels just might make a believer out of you. And if you're like me, somewhat of a skeptic, the book will certainly be food for thought. Speaking of food . . . I wonder, if I'm visited by an angel, what do they like to eat? Maybe I should head back to the bookstore and see whether that cookbook for angels is out yet.

Natural Prostate Relief

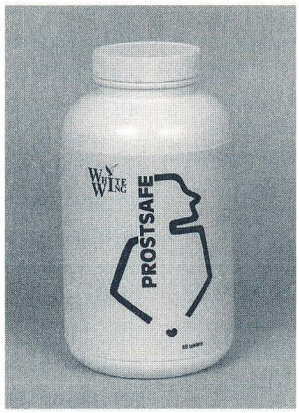
It's a natural fact. If you are a male over 40 and don't already suffer from a prostate gland disorder, the odds are 2 to 1 that you will before you are 59. By the age of 65, most American men have enlarged prostates.

As the years pass, mild discomforts can become disabling. Today, prostate surgery is the second most commonly performed surgery in men over age 65! Surgical complications can include total loss of bladder control and sexual dysfunction.

Prescription drugs may halt the swelling, but rarely end the suffering. Also, many prescription drugs may have side-effects, like weak erections and low sex drive.

Many doctors feel that prostate disorders can be treated or prevented by giving the prostate gland the nutrition it lacks.

Recent scientific research has shown how to remedy the underlying problems associated with prostate disorders--safely and effectively. These results have been published in the British Journal of Clinical Pharmacology, the American Journal of Gerontology, and papers from the National Cancer Institute. They reveal that several vitamins, minerals and natural herbs can dramatically shrink the prostate and improve urinary performance in older men.



The most modern application of these healthy ingredients is found in Prostsafe™ from Whitewing Labs. Prostsafe is the nutritional "tool kit" for men with benign prostate problems, and those who wish to prevent them. It is a mixture of zinc, serenoa serrulata, ginseng, certain amino acids, bee pollen and vitamins A, B-6 and E. Working as a team, these ingredients have been shown to shrink a swollen prostate.

Dr. Leslie Atterbury III, M.D., says "Prostsafe supplies essential vitamins, minerals and herbs needed to nourish and maintain a healthy prostate."

Our customers have said Prostsafe™ helps to:

Halt the endless trips to the bathroom during the night!

Stop that burning sensation during or after urination!

Prevent uncontrollable wetting!

Improve bladder control!

Empty bladder completely!

Sit through an entire sports event !

Eliminate burning feeling!

For as little as a dollar a day, that seems like inexpensive insurance against prostate disorders. If for some reason you are not satisfied, just return the unused portion within 30 days for a full refund.

sell her art collection and thus several weeks after her husband's death attended a party at the local art gallery where she met Pula, a psychic and healer. The interaction between Pula and Eva brings the reader into a more intimate understanding of the quest for self-discovery and the rewards. Pula, trained in regression techniques, is hired by Eva to unlock the causes of her insomnia. Eva discovers more than just a cure for her sleeplessness, and throughout the book, Pula prompts Eva to further investigate her own past-life history and offers deep insights into her experiences.

Unknown to Eva and to Pula, they would discover how intertwined their paths would become in unraveling what really did happen to George.

Pula adds a refreshing new twist to a murder mystery, as his dialog adds depth to an otherwise ordinary and plain plot. Woven through this story are his comments, unusual responses and actions along with explanations about how karma impacts current events, how relationships continue over lifetimes to work out justice and how one's extended awareness is used to effectively resolve life's problems.

Under a Lemon Moon is a light novel and reads quickly. It took a while to get into but held my interest through to the end. I did suspect the guilty party in the beginning, but I found myself much more interested in how Pula, the psychic, was going to play out.

The story involves disruptive relationships, a potential love affair, a continually running commentary on the great artists of our world and an unusually attentive sheriff.

The value of this book is its ability to integrate personal growth throughout the events in the story and thus offer meaning and solution to life dilemmas. I felt this was a refreshing approach to the murder mystery, but there was a little too much description, which tended to slow down the action.

The Pleiadian Agenda, A New Cosmology for the Age of Light by Barbara Hand Clow, Bear & Company, Sante Fe, New Mexico, 1995, PB 303 pp., $15.

In The Pleiadian Agenda, Barbara Hand Clow grabs hold of a very volatile mix of topics: politics, astrology, traditional religions, hard science, sex and cutting-edge metaphysics. She wastes no time establishing the ground for this book: the future of our lives as conscious beings and the critical choice we face right now, right here in our everyday lives. We can live as zombies or we can create powerful lives by choosing to exercise our free will in remembering who we are.

This message is a logical extension and update of other channeled books. Referring to some of them, Clow warns against expecting a horde of spaceships to come down and rescue us from the conflicts and life-threatening eco-patterns in flux here. She is emphatic about the need to clear our addiction to apocalyptic belief systems as a critical key to planetary, even galactic, species survival.

In the witty but blunt style that often characterizes the Pleiadian voice, she addresses the urgency of taking back our human power, of tuning into the escalating energies pouring onto the planet, and reversing the flow of destructive electromagnetic messages that swirl around us.

It is an increasingly popular notion that electronic media and devices project harmful vibrations and/or messages that weaken or deplete our vitality, mental clarity and health. Clow states that we can, and should, turn the tables. By strengthening our own bodies, emotions and thought fields, we can learn to objectively decode what is being projected at us. We can emit our own constructive and powerfully loving intentions, projecting new health into all the dimensions of our world, whether physical or intangible. She talks specifically about how we can tune our energies to do this and why we must take responsibility for changing the quality of life on this planet now.

Recognizing the likelihood of skeptical and cynical response to the factual accuracy of this very unusual account of Earth's history, Clow asserts the book's practical value even if read only as metaphor. She brings forth an intriguing cast of interplanetary characters including Lucifer, The Mind of the Sun, King Lizard and the Sirian/Egyptian God Anubis. They address highly controversial matters of Earth's geological, political, sexual and religious history, presenting compelling viewpoints certain to stimulate the reader to seriously question his or her foundations of education and experience. The book also presents a wealth of astrological and astronomical detail, outlining nine dimensions of reality and describing ways to integrate the properties of the controversial photon band that Earth is perceived to be entering in cyclical rhythm.

December 21, A.D. 2012, is presented as the date for the end of time as we know it. Our hysteria as we approach the end of this millennium is seen as parallel to the "millennial fever" which gripped the human populace back in A.D. 999. The Pleiadians' agenda as presented by Clow is to avert the same mistaken response as the new millennium dawns. We are urged to refuse to repeat old patterns of fear and impotence foisted upon us by those in current control of resources and media, the "World Management Team." She presents both the Mayan Calendar and a wealth of astrological data as tools for forging a new mindset to transcend the challenge and

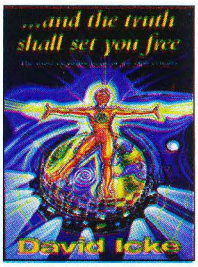
. . . and the truth shall set you free:

The most explosive book of the 20th century by David Icke

Sovereignty Press Santa Fe, New Mexico, ISBN 0 9526147 07, 474 pp, $24.95



"We seek the free flow of information . . . a nation that is afraid to let the people judge the truth and falsehood in an open market is a nation afraid of its people."

John F. Kennedy, February 1962
speech at Columbia University

This balanced, no-holds-barred exposé presents the problem-reaction-solution strategies of those who have contributed to centralization of power in the world today. Ostracized for his outspoken views by the British media since 1990, author David Icke, a former sportscaster for the BBC, fearlessly names and holds to the fire the feet of well-known members of an international "global elite"—the same families and individuals who continue to surface behind the bulk of worldwide events. Rather than blaming only them, however, Icke squarely points to our own complicity in acquiescing to their plan of world domination.

Are we, like many members of the Council on Foreign Relations, the Trilateral Commission, the Bilderbergers, the World Bank, the IMF, the United Nations, etc. (and their prolific, seemingly benign, charitable and nonprofit offshoots) unknowingly helping the global elite conquer the planet? Icke directs us to accept our own responsibility in fueling the out-of-control power struggle threatening our world. By giving up our personal power to outside forces and to rigid dogmatic belief systems—be they church, government, the AMA, the neighbors, the family, the political attitudes of "right" or "left"—we elevate restrictive self-serving dogma to the level of sacrosanct and contribute to a "pyramid of deception."

A jammed, magnetic-energy field surrounding the planet has trapped us in a political, economic, cultural, psychological and military prison by the same force that has fed off our fears, guilt and resentment throughout time. Techniques of control whip up a something-must-be-done frenzy while agents provocateurs incite internal divide-and-rule strategies. "Both sides" on many issues "oppose" what they really support. Nonetheless, we are destined to be transformed by the chaos of collapse as outdated structures give way to love and respect—the ultimate power—to heal ourselves and the planet.

The haunting title, ...and the truth shall set you free, came to mind again and again while I read this riveting book. Many seemingly random pieces of political intrigue (Jonestown, Nuremberg, Freemasonry, royal families, environmentalism, nuclear energy, assassinations, microchipped populations, the Gulf War, Waco and many more) are strung together with secrets of mysticism and tools of empowerment. I found myself emerging not only with a clearer perception of my own truth in relation to this ubiquitous web of intrigue, but also more able to communicate it.

Unlike most patriot research, which Icke acknowledges as an essential contribution in uncovering the sinister aim of the global elite, Icke begins with an awareness of the multidimensional nature of the universe and our own status as multidimensional beings. Exposing everyday manipulation, he points out the spiritual causes and solutions that are readily available. He demonstrates how the outer world is a reflection of our own emotions, belief and actions in a framework that is grounded enough for the most pragmatic of individuals. Crammed with fascinating facts . . . and the truth shall set you free brilliantly weaves the darkness and the light. Buy this book, read it, share it.

—Judi V. Brewer

". . . and the truth shall set you free"
THE MOST EXPLOSIVE BOOK OF THE 20TH CENTURY
David Icke

Icke reveals the esoteric background to the global conspiracy and offers an inspiring spiritual solution in which every man, woman and child on Planet Earth breaks free from the daily programming—the "Coup d'etat on the human mind"—and takes back their infinite power to think for themselves and decide their own destiny. His words are designed to inspire all of us to be who we really are, to fling open the door of the mental prison we build for ourselves, and to walk into the light of freedom. (See Book Review on page 61)

From the start we follow Ciani's sweet fingers as they lead us through "Meeting Mozart." It is here we find what is in store for us in the next 35 minutes.

"Riding Heaven's Wave: Eulogy to a Surfer," places us on a surfboard at dusk; we look back to see the moonlight shining brightly down on an emerald wave. For the next four minutes we take the ride of our lives.

In the liner notes, Suzanne talks about the changes in her life that motivated the album. "After 19 years in New York City, I moved to an ocean-side cabin in Northern California. I learned to surf, rode horseback on the beach and took long walks in the redwoods." She later goes on to tell us that she successfully battled breast cancer and dealt with the death of her mother.

Looking back at the great musical artists, we see that they have endured great suffering and despair. When they can bottle those emotions and combine them with those of love and passion, we have the makings of a great album.

And that's what we have here; Ciani has reached deep into her soul to create this album. Rarely these days do we find artists who can release all the creative energy that is inside of them for forty minutes. There are no scattered flurries of brilliance we would find with a spoiled artist. Dream Suite is a solid effort and worth the price of admission. —Al Hill

Mariam
Nights of Passage

9 tracks - 45 minutes, 1995, Musical Transformations Inc. 369 Montezuma, Suite 313, Santa Fe, New Mexico 87501

Nights of Passage is a pleasant journey through musical caverns. While some of the trip takes you to new heights, others leave you reaching for the search button.

Mariam, who also composed and produced the album, used mostly synthesizers to create this relaxing music.

Where Nights awakens is on track three, titled "The Call." It is here that Mariam succeeds to rouse the soul. He offers us a rhythmic chant of "Run" that excites the music. You sense it was here that Mariam had released some musical boundaries and had some fun with the music.

There are some other nice spots on this journey like "Fire of Sacrifice" and "Return to Forever." Here, Mariam gives the album some depth, adding various musical sounds such as guitar.

However, there are some dull and uninteresting moments, as in the first two tracks, "Nights of Passage" and "Blinded by the Light." Unfortunately, it seems to be too much of the same synthesized riffs that have saturated the market for the past 10 years.

The dilemma here is whether "The Call" makes Nights a worthwhile purchase. It is truly a fabulous song, but how did it end up here?

Nights of Passage might be worth the risk—it does have its peaks. Remember, this is only one listener's opinion. There is no doubt that Mariam applies himself, but one has to wonder whether he was trying to create something that is someone else's sound. Does the name Yanni ring a bell? —Al Hill

The Great Boycott

Networking with people all over the world, Jon Rappoport, author of AIDS Inc. and frequent critic of high-tech medical research, has launched a global boycott of the eight largest pesticide companies on Earth: Dow Chemical, Du Pont, Monsanto, Imperial Chemical Industries (England), Rhone Poulenc (France), Ciba-Geigy (Switzerland), Bayer and Hoechst (Germany).

These giants heavily promote genetic engineering of our food crops to swell their profits by creating new breeds that can tolerate greater amounts of herbicides. [See "The Devil's Bargain: Profits Today, Plagues Tomorrow," Perceptions Nov/Dec 1995.] Other ways they poison the planet include their billions of pounds of industrial waste and chlorine-based products.

In addition, they own or share companies with the following pharmaceutical houses, whose drugs Rappoport's group includes in the boycott: Marion Merrell Dow, Eli Lilly, Endo Labs, Du Pont Pharma, Du Pont Merck and GD Searle.

Some of the more common products these firms make are: "styrofoam" plastics, Cepacol, Ziploc bags, Fantastik, Handi-Wrap, Saran Wrap, Spray 'N Wash, Glass Plus, and Permasoft (Dow); Conoco petroleum products; Lycra, Dacron and Antron fibers; Teflon; Dupont and Lucite paints (Dupont) and NutraSweet, Equal, Simple Pleasures food products, Astroturf and Wear Dated Carpets, Roundup and Dimension herbicides (Monsanto).

The Great Boycott urges all citizens to immediately stop buying these companies' products and to demand that their investors (including institutions such as universities) sell and refuse to hold any of their stock. For more information, including many other products, call (213) 243-9005 or write Jon at 2633 Lincoln Blvd., #256, Santa Monica, Calif. 90405.

≫ On February 11, 1989, a Samoan American named Arthur Dole held a wedding shower for his daughter at the family home in Los Angeles. Following a neighbor's complaint about loud music, dozens of sheriff's deputies arrived in 54 cars and invaded the house. They arrested 35 people, and beat several so severely that they suffered permanent injuries. There was one case of permanent brain damage. After a seven-month trial, the case was settled recently with an award of $15.9 million in damages and $2.3 million in attorney's fees, making it the largest police-misconduct award in U.S. history; 25 deputies were found guilty of conspiracy to deprive the Doles of their constitutional rights.

Defense attorney Paul Paquette was "shocked" at the verdict. In an interview with California Lawyer (February 1996) he said there were only a few minor injuries and that "under any interpretation there were only five or six deputies who could have been involved in a conspiracy to cover up what happened." According to jurors, sheriffs lost photographs of the injuries for more than six years, and police reports were written in pencil, with whole paragraphs erased or amended in other hnadwriting. This was explained by officers claiming they were "not very bright" and "could not spell very well."

Sheriff Sherman Block condemned the verdict as "extreme." None of the officers involved has ever been disciplined; several have since been promoted. All fines were paid by the County. Sheriff Block has been in charge of the responsible department since 1982 and was elected to a fourth term in 1994. In

March 8, 1996

The White House

"TO THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES"

Section 202(d) of the National Emergencies Act (50 U.S.C. 1622(d)) provides for the automatic termination of a national emergency unless, prior to the anniversary date of its declaration, the President publishes in the Federal Register and transmits to the Congress a notice stating that the emergency is to continue in effect beyond the anniversary date. In accordance with this provision, I have sent the enclosed notice, stating that the Iran emergency declared on March 15, 1995, pursuant to the International Emergency Economic Powers Act (50 U.S.C. 1701-1706) is to continue in effect beyond March 15, 1996, to the Federal Register for publication. This emergency is separate from that declared on November 14, 1979, in connection with the Iranian hostage crisis and therefore requires separate renewal of emergency authorities.

The factors that led me to declare a national emergency with respect to Iran on March 15, 1995, have not been resolved. The actions and policies of the Government of Iran, including its support for international terrorism, efforts to undermine the Middle East peace process, and its acquisition of weapons of mass destruction and the means to deliver them, continue to threaten the national security, foreign policy, and economy of the United States. Accordingly, I have determined that it is necessary to maintain in force the broad authorities that are in place by virtue of the March 15, 1995, declaration of emergency.

William J. Clinton

November 1995, he testified before Congress in support of HR 1446, the Law Enforcement Officers Civil Liability Act of 1995.

This bill, the only one sponsored by Rep. Moorehead, is designed "to promote fairness in lawsuits brought against State and local law enforcement officers." It states that no damages shall be awarded against any officer except to punish conduct "specifically intended unlawfully to cause serious personal injury" or which is "engaged in with flagrant indifference to the rights of the injured party." In these rare cases, damages are limited to $10,000 and attorney fees to a third of damages, so it will be difficult for plaintiffs to find legal help. The bill protects any peace officer, prison guard or corrections officer and includes protection for off-duty conduct!

≫ According to The Spotlight, Tom Patrick, an investigator for the Phoenix Foundation, found a subliminal message displaying the words "Gun Control—jobs" displayed in a 20-second political awareness commercial "Choose or Lose" shown on MTV, CNN and VH-1. The messages are normally visible for 1/30 of a second and thus undetectable by the conscious mind unless the commercial is played back frame by frame.

≫ On March 4, the Supreme Court ruled that the government can seize property used to commit a crime, even if the owner is innocent of any wrongdoing. The case involved the forfeiture of a Michigan woman's car because her husband used it for illegal sex with a prostitute. The court rejected her claim for compensation as an innocent owner. In his ruling, Chief Justice Rehnquist said, "Innocence and fairness are beside the point." More than 200,000 Americans have had property seized under local, state or federal statutes since 1985. In 1992, $3.8 billion worth of private property was stolen by criminals, and $4.1 billion was taken by law-enforcement agents under civil forfeiture laws.

≫ One of the problems with existing biochip implants used for ID purposes is the short range at which their data can be scanned. A typical implant used by InfoPet, Inc. is the size of a grain of rice and can be read up to three feet away. European scientists are now developing a version with enough range to determine location using the global positioning system. The new chip has been implanted in crabs, ostensibly to locate valuable shellfish resources, but actually to test signal strength in variable poor conditions. Crabs make ideal test subjects, as they are easy to track.

Preliminary results show the location of an identified crab accurate to 30 feet, up to three miles away and in 100 feet of water during storm conditions. Human versions of this chip will be available in 1997 and render obsolete the Smart Card technology being developed by the U.S. Postal Service. The chip holds only 20k of data, much less than a Smart Card, but has the added advantage of accurately locating an individual's body every time.

Symbol Technology, Inc. has developed a national ID system which is much cheaper than Smart Cards or biochips, which it is selling to DMVs nationwide. Called the PDF-417, it is a two-dimensional dot code printed between bar codes, which can hold 11k of data, enough to identify a vehicle, the registered owner's address and Social Security number, and lienholders.

Parking meters can also be inscribed with a PDF-417, allowing enforcers to scan both identities and issue a ticket in 4 seconds. The system will provide valuable "traffic analysis" of a vehicle's movements, and fines imposed can be reported by cellular links directly to consumer credit databases. Lenders could then collect fines for the DMV using an impound account, as is common for property tax. The Association of American Motor Vehicles (central organization of DMVs) is interested in the system and has pilot programs in several states.

>> Police in Redwood City, California, have installed a listening system covering several city blocks, designed to detect gunfire and send a signal back to headquarters which locates the shots to within ten yards of where they were fired. A similar system is being installed in Washington D.C., funded by a federal grant.

In Baltimore, the police wired a 16-block area of downtown with enough video cameras to allow them to monitor all outdoor spaces continuously, at a cost of $1 million.

Frank Russo, director of a business group working with the police, said "This is our way to say, 'We care, and we're watching.'"

A similar system is in use in Phoenix, Arizona, for highway monitoring. The cameras are highly visible, mounted on poles more than 60- feet high. When the system detects a slowdown in traffic, freeway ramp access systems are activated to reduce traffic.

Addressing widespread concern about privacy, the traffic department simply says there is "no cause for concern" because the cameras are highly visible and have insufficient resolution to read a registration plate. However, TVX International in England has developed a miniature wide-angle infrared highway camera mounted on a computer chip which digitizes images and sends the signal over ordinary telephone wires. The whole assembly is a quarter-inch square, designed to be invisible to people who shoot out the lenses of ordinary cameras. The new system can read letters one-inch high, and several have been installed in Los Angeles.

>> According to James Norman in the December 1995 issue of Media Bypass, a "Fifth Column" group of computer hackers has been using a Cray Supercomputer since 1991 to break into foreign bank computers and trace money from a wide variety of questionable activities, including kickbacks, drug and arms deals, insider trading, tax evasion, selling secrets and software piracy. The group has identified such payments in numbered accounts belonging to members of Congress. It has quietly withdrawn $2.5 billion from these accounts and sent letters to congresspersons advising them of its knowledge of the payments. The letters give a choice: Retire immediately or face exposure. A record number of senators and representatives have since announced their retirement.

≫ Every law-enforcement agency in the United States has the expense of maintaining a separate, mobile, computer communications system. To cut costs, a new Law-Enforcement Satellite System (LESS) is being developed. An entire new communications infrastructure will be needed. Using Internet-type protocols, the system may allow patrol vehicles to be automated and linked directly to the National Crime Information Center, which combines all law-enforcement data from separate agencies. The use of satellite technology will make the system fully redundant, immune to any terrestrial disaster that may cause individual control centers to fail.

≫ A Multi-Agency Herbal Medicine Import Task Force (MAHMITF) has just been created, involving the FDA, IRS, U.S. Customs and Department of Agriculture. It will enforce the Phytosanitary Measures section of NAFTA, which is so loosely worded that trade in any herb or dietary supplement can be restricted. The Phytosanitary Measures section was copied verbatim into GATT, and the World Trade Organization (WTO) is now using the section as a basis for authority to take action against countries which do not conform to its herbal regulations. ≫ HR 2580 is a bill "To guarantee a republican form of government to the States by preventing paramilitary violence." The bill states that organized criminal actions are an increasing threat to the form of government in some States and alleges that violence is increasing in part because of unfounded exaggerations about the impact of recent firearms laws and baseless conspiracy theories regarding the government. It calls upon the attorney general to create special law-enforcement training programs for dealing with politically motivated violence.

≫ At a recent meeting of the Mutual UFO Network (MUFON), Dr. Roger Leir, a surgeon, described how in August 1995 he removed what may be three alien implants from two people brought to him by Derrel Sims of Houston, a hypnotherapist and abduction researcher. Two implants were removed from the large toe of one patient, a woman, and the third object came from the back of the left hand of a man. The people were unaware they had implants, which were discovered on X rays taken for unrelated reasons.

There was no associated pain, scars nor other signs of entry to the body, however both patients had indications of abduction history. The patients exper-

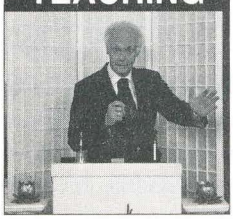
Become A "DOCTOR OF METAPHYSICS"

"ALL HOME STUDY" QUALITY TRAINING - NO PREVIOUS EDUCATIONAL REQUIREMENTS

IMPROVE PEOPLES' LIVES THROUGH TEACHING



GUIDE OTHERS THROUGH COUNSELING

PRACTICE METAPHYSICAL HEALING

NEW. . .ALL HOME STUDY PROGRAM – NO PREVIOUS EDUCATIONAL REQUIRMENTS – only a sincere desire to improve the quality of human life – individually and collectively. Study at home – at your own pace and leisure to become a Doctoral Professional helping others to help themselves through Metaphysical means – full time or in your spare time to start.

We, the University of Metaphysics in Los Angeles, have prepared an extensive and detailed Research Report entitled,"A DOCTORAL CAREER IN METAPHYSICS," which we would like to send you for $5.00. It allows you to properly evaluate the entire field of Metaphysics as it exists today, including opportunities available, realistic earnings that can be expected, operating legalities – everything. Included are full details on how you may enter our Doctoral Degree Program should you wish to do so after reviewing and evaluating the report. Tuition is quite affordable. Tuition financing available. No credit check. The University of Metaphysics of itself can provide the financing of your Doctoral Degree Program. Alternative Educational format for accelerated, self-paced Home Study allows most who apply themselves to complete their Doctoral Degree Program in just a fraction of the time of traditional higher education.

CREDIBILITY. . .THAT HAS BEEN EARNED AND ESTABLISHED OVER MANY YEARS.

A REVELATION OF ASTONISHING IMPLICATIONS.
AN AMAZING LOOK AT THE INNER WORKINGS OF THE SHADOW GOVERNMENT.

Many in the patriotic community support personal sovereignty in various forms and degrees. All of us conclude that the government has either abandoned us or enslaved us by withholding vital information & by overcomplicating legal jargon.

There are deeper issues, however. A shadow government behind our elected officials has an agenda which includes various levels of sophisticated technology to control the population.

Between the place of freedom & the place of slavery is a vast complex network of both emotional and electronic manipulation. Unless we discover who we are in the game, and how it is played, we may succumb to a power unknown to us and end up lost in a maze of utter confusion.

This lecture takes us from our first moment of breath into our sleep, powerfully demonstrating that those who know what makes up a complete human being can quite carefully and with extreme precision dismantle our potential.

Once you understand who you are, and why "they" feel you must be rendered helpless, you can use all their information to your advantage.

ienced extreme pain when the implant areas were touched and when they were removed, because the implants had been placed close to nerve fibers and may have been attached to them as monitoring devices.

The first object removed was flat, approximately triangular, measuring half a centimeter on each side. Inside was a highly magnetic, black, shiny, metallic material, covered in a thick, dense, gray membrane which could not be cut with a scalpel. The membrane was nearly impossible to remove, unlike the coatings that normally form on objects which have been in the body for long periods. Analysis proved the membrane to be a mixture of keratin, the same material as hair and fingernails, and oxygen-carrying pigment from red blood cells. It was apparently composed of material from the patients' own bodies before the objects were inserted. Dr. Leir said that if we knew how to do this, it would solve the problem of rejection of implanted organs. The metallic material has not yet been analyzed. The tissue surrounding the implants was unusual in two ways; there were no signs of inflammation, and there were many nerve endings which should not have been there.

>> According to the January 12 "Web Review," Netscape Corporation has entered a contract with the National Security Agency (NSA) to produce a suite of Netscape browser and server software that will support the NSA's new Fortezza Card project. Netscape has about 80 percent of the market for Web browsers.

The Fortezza Card is very similar in function to the supposedly abandoned Clipper Chip; it encrypts data, creating an appearance of privacy, but allowing a "back door" through which government can read the data. The NSA is heavily subsidizing development of a commercial version of Fortezza. It lobbied hard for the Clipper Chip, which was supported by President Clinton but failed to gain public acceptance. The agency now has the problem of getting the private sector to accept an encryption standard that allows government spying. According to the Baltimore Sun, the NSA has been trying this for at least 25 years, possibly subverting companies like Siemens (Germany) and Crypto Ag (Switzerland) to leave secret back doors in their encryption products. Observers suspect the NSA of having deals with Microsoft and Lotus to prevent anonymous E-mail and does have one with TriTeal of California, which sells UNIX systems in Europe and the United States. It is building its systems to meet NSA's Fortezza-based security needs.

A Too-close Encounter

Washington: The space shuttle Endeavor narrowly avoided a collision with a gigantic UFO during its 12-day mission in September, and a top-secret National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA) audio tape proves it! So says author William Kliner, who claims to have obtained a copy from highly placed NASA sources and terms the incident "the most dramatic close encounter in history."

On the 23-second tape, recorded off one of several secret radio frequencies that NASA reserves for classified conversations with shuttle astronauts, Commander David Walker says:

Walker: BOGEY AT 3 O'CLOCK! GOD, WHAT IS IT? MY GOD, IT'S COMING RIGHT AT US . . .

NASA: What's there?

Walker: THERE'S NO WAY! OH, GOD! GET BACK. MOVE!

NASA: Endeavor! Endeavor! What. . . explain . . .

Walker: WHAT THE . . . WHERE ARE WE? WHERE IS IT? WHERE . . . IT'S GONE. IT'S GONE . . . NOT (unintelligible) . . . UFO. SPACECRAFT . . . HUGE . . . INTELLIGENT? . . . OVER THERE!

NASA: Endeavor. . . Switch! . . . NOW!

The tape ends abruptly here with what would seem to be a NASA order for Walker to change radio frequency. While nobody other than Walker, his crew and a handful of NASA officials knows exactly what happened next, the Endeavor returned to Earth safely September 18, indicating that the encounter ended without further incident.

Kliner, who has published hundreds of articles on America's space program over the past 25 years, declared:

> This is dazzling proof that UFOs not only exist, they are piloted by extraterrestrials who are interested in our technology and possibly even mankind's ventures into space.
> Until now, I didn't believe in the existence of UFOs, and I certainly didn't believe that extraterrestrials were visiting our planet. But now I know better. Space aliens actually observed our shuttle astronauts as they orbited Earth, and NASA's own tape proves it.

Spokesmen for the agency declined to comment on the author's report pending the outcome of what one called > an investigation into the source of unauthorized information that might or might not have basis in fact.

Like NASA, Commander Walker and his crew—Pilot Ken Cockrell and Mission Specialists James Voss, James Newman and Michael Gemhardt—are keeping quiet. However, Kliner's sources told him the Endeavor and crew did avert an in-orbit collision with:

> a massive,walnut-shaped spacecraft of unknown origin. From what I understand, the spacecraft was the size of a small city and glowed bright green as it approached the shuttle. At some point during the encounter, the UFO veered off course to avoid a collision. As far as I know there was no contact between the UFO and the shuttle. If there was contact, my sources are unaware of it.

[In the interest of accuracy, despite Kliner's assertion of "dazzling proof that UFOs . . . are piloted by extraterrestrials," the quotes give no indication that the UFO was of ET origin. —Editor

HOAGLAND PRESS CONFERENCE

>> Washington, D.C., March 21—At a two-hour press conference in the National Press Club's Grand Ballroom, Richard Hoagland, director of the Enterprise (formerly Mars) Mission, presented several credible experts who discussed the evidence of anomalies on Mars and the moon. [See Perceptions July/August 1995.]

Ken Johnston, former NASA Data and Photo Documenation Supervisor who worked with Dr. Thornton Page during the Apollo moon missions, said he had seen photographs and movie footage which convinced him that anomalies do exist on the lunar surface.

He and Page were the first to see Apollo 14 film footage showing several lights and a strange plume of smoke in a crater on the moon's dark side. When the interesting frames had disappeared the next day, however, Page denied they ever existed: "There were no lights."

He ordered many copies of Apollo moon images destroyed, but Johnston secreted a set in the Oklahoma City University archives and kept 500-1,000 himself. The copies are less clear and close up than some originals, however.

Marvin Czarnik, a retired aerospace engineer who heads a separate group from Hoagland's to research lunar anomalies, discussed NASA images of "the Shard," a huge rock pillar that cannot be explained by geology. It appears to cast a shadow, but image enhancement has revealed that the shadow is actually a solid object. Behind the Shard is "the Cube," seven miles tall.

Architect Robert Fiertek and geologist Ron Nicks, formerly with the Batelle Institute, explained that the Cube and several other anomalous structures appear to be made of glass.

Nicks also presented recurring anomalies in haze and shadow effects on moon images: Since the moon lacks an atmosphere, light should not scatter, but there always seems to be haze on the horizon. Shadows should be black and sharp, yet they are often gray. This cannot be explained as an effect of the film processing.

"Every Child Is Our Child" —UNICEF Slogan

At President Clinton's direction (and Hillary's urging), U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations Madeleine Albright has endorsed the U.N. Convention On the Rights of the Child. It now awaits U.S. ratification.

This globalist treaty mandates government intrusion into how parents run their homes, authorizing the U.N. to dictate how children are raised and what parents can and cannot do.

Among other provisions, the treaty would empower government to dictate religious training for adopted children (Article 2); require that every child be registered at birth (Article 7); prohibit parents from forbidding children to join gangs and cults (Article 15); establish children's "right to privacy" regarding sex, contraceptive use, abortions, and pornography (Article 16); and establish committees of 10 "experts" to investigate and prosecute parents who violate their children's rights (Article 43).

Since Great Britain signed four years ago, it has found how destructive the treaty is. In fact, it is so unpopular that the first U.N. "audit" of children's rights there noted repeated violations by parents; it seems the British still have enough self-determinism to reject being ordered how to raise their children.

For months, Concerned Women for America (CWA), a family-rights lobby, has kept the treaty bottled up in the U.S. Senate, preventing a vote. Now pro-U.N. administration officials are pushing for ratification. Contact CWA for its Special Legislative Report at P.O. Box 65453, Washington, D.C. 20024-0035.

URGES YOU TO SUPPORT

CHARLES E. COLLINS
FOR PRESIDENT
On the Republican Ticket

Please Study His Twelve Point "Platform for Prosperity" Carefully. This Plan Could Return Our Nation To Our Constitution and Bill of Rights.

1. Resign from the United Nations. Send foreign troops Home. No more American troops under foreign command. Make our Constitution the Supreme Law of the Land again.
2. Restore individual, national and State's rights. Dismantle and combine superfluous agencies. Abolish those with police power used to oppress the people such as EPA, CIA and OHSA.
3. Abolish Income tax and the Internal Revenue Service. Replace with state-collected 5% sales tax with 2% cap on food and medicine, designed to self-destruct. As gross national product goes up, sales tax rate goes down.
4. Print United States currency backed by gold and silver, monetized and held by the U.S. Treasury. Not to be removed by any other bank or nation. Buy back the Federal Reserve, pay off National Debt.
5. Restore the Strength of our Armed Services and control illegal immigration. Reopen internal bases, withdraw most troops from overseas. Use them to protect and patrol our borders, and to stop drug traffic.
6. Abolish Department of Education; return to state and local control; End Goals 2000 and Outcome Based Education, develop system to sensibly teach phonics, Reading, math, algebra, geometry, trig, calculus, government and history.
7. Negotiate fair trade and levy lawful tariffs; repeal NAFTA, GATT/WTO; Bring factories home and restore high-paying jobs to America's citizens. End Enigma of "Free Trade" that robs America of jobs and factories.
8. Return control of welfare dollars to the states; Save up to 85% of total cost of welfare immediately by ending Federal bureaucracy in welfare. Stop all aid to illegal aliens and foreign countries. End federal waste.
9. Repeal inheritance and estate taxes; Secure the family home and farm, help city, counties and states abolish inheritance taxes.
10. Issue Executive Orders to systematically negate previous orders. Then abolish all unconstitutional emergency powers granted to the Presidency by Congress in 1862 and 1933. End the continual state of national emergency once and for all!
11. Mr. Collins would protect the Second Amendment undiluted and all the rest of the Bill of Rights.
12. Introduce measures designed to eliminate vote fraud, reform voting procedures, campaign financing and corporate and foreign lobbying.

Meanwhile cast your vote by a certified absentee ballot in 1996.

"MAD COW DISEASE"

"Downer Cow Syndrome" and Alzheimer's Disease: What's the Connection?

The transference of "Mad Cow Disease" to humans has now been documented, and public concern has uncovered one of animal agriculture's darkest secrets: the practice of feeding offal—manure, restaurant waste and other unsavory materials—to animals raised for food.

In Great Britain, the disease, also known as bovine spongiform encephalopathy (BSE), has spread due to the use of infected animal parts—including brains, spinal cords and intestines—in cattle feed.

To control BSE, in 1988 the British government forbade recycling this "bypass protein," but in the United States the practice continues with little government regulation or oversight. So far, there have been no verified U.S. cases, but if an outbreak occurs the current system of feeding animals to animals would promote its rapid spread.

"This should serve as a wakeup call to everyone whose ideas of animal farming come from children's books and fairy tales," said Scott Williams, Executive Director of the Farm Animal Reform Movement (FARM). "Animal agriculture is a grisly, grisly business. You may imagine a contented cow chewing its cud, but that cow is more likely being fattened on the intestines of its slaughtered comrades."

The practice includes other animals: Poultry, swine and other, largely herbivorous farm animals have their feed supplemented with parts of other animals, manure and food waste. ("Ascites," abdominal hemorrhaging in broiler chickens, is thought to be caused by their unnatural, animal-based diet.)

United States Department of Agriculture (USDA) inspectors currently claim to have examined 2,660 cow specimens in 43 states and to have detected no BSE. However, since 200,000 animals are slaughtered daily, the USDA study represents less than one-tenth of one percent of the total livestock population. It did not include animal products already on supermarket shelves and did not insure safety for the consumer.

The financial stakes weigh heavily against the government giving straight answers on such studies; if it admitted the problem and ordered as many animals destroyed as some observers suspect are already infected, U.S. farmers would demand subsidies on the order of $10 billion to replace their losses.

The human form of "Mad Cow Disease," called Creutzfeldt-Jacob Disease (CJD), is a dementia syndrome, and, in England, doctors have misdiagnosed CJD as Alzheimer's disease. The July 7, 1990, issue of The Lancet medical journal suggested a connection between meat consumption and dementia syndromes. In 1993, the Journal of Neuroepidemiology printed a study showing a 200 to 300 percent higher occurrence of dementia syndromes among those who consume animal products.

These articles cause alert U.S. medical practitioners and lay people to question both the accuracy and the frequency of Alzheimer's diagnoses in America.

"There is no law that requires you to file a 1040 return."

–W. James Knowles
Attorney at Law

W. James Knowles, Attorney at Law, has spent years penetrating the onerous Internal Revenue Service Code to find that, most likely, you don't have to pay a cent of taxes! A member of the California Bar, he has practiced law for 34 years since his graduation from the prestigious Hastings School of Law.

Amazing Book Reveals How To GET THE IRS OUT OF YOUR LIFE ...ONCE AND FOR ALL!

"A 1040 return is an offer to pay taxes. Don't want to pay? Why offer?" That's what criminal lawyer James Knowles has to say about our confusing tax system in this startling expose of the Internal Revenue Code.

HERE IT IS, YOUR STEP BY STEP PLAN TO PERSONAL FREEDOM: A complete strategy– crafted by a lawyer–that a layman can follow. Each and every point is backed up by court decisions.

You'll read how the U.S. Supreme Court has consistently upheld the rights of citizens against the government, even the IRS, and how to get them out of your life.

THE PATRIOT PROBLEM: It's sad but true, books about the IRS have gotten more people in trouble than they have helped. Why? Because they have been written by frustrated patriots who argued philosophy, not the law. When they did quote law, it was often misquoted.

No Federal judge will toss out the IRS based on arcane arguments. But, the good news is that the IRS can be beaten...once you know how. That's exactly what this book shows.

The uninformed can go on paying taxes. After reading this book you will know the law, know your rights, and regain financial freedom.

LEGAL PROOF BY A LAWYER: This 128 page, hard bound book has been polished to perfection by a lawyer who graduated from Hastings School of Law, one of the most difficult and prestigious schools in America.

He so despises the IRS, and what they have done to working people, that he has spent years devising this legal plan to help people regain their full rights.

Hate lawyers yourself? Consider this: the lawyer-author of this book says it may be in your best interest to not hire a lawyer! You'll read over 100 successful challenges to the IRS, and a clear understanding of what they mean.

MORE THAN CASES AND PROOF! Yes, you get all the knowledge needed. But there's more. You'll also be given actual forms to use to get out of their grasp.

And there's even more. You get actual guidelines to follow, and letters you can copy or emulate. One time through this book, and you will have the knowledge to totally change your life. Your understanding of not only the IRS, but also of society and government, will be permanently altered...for the better!

YOU'LL LEARN:

- How to Stop IRS Seizures, p. 33
- How to Challenge IRS Liens, p. 53
- Block Record Seizures, p. 44
- Stop Filing1040's, p. 91

STOP THEM COLD It's a shame. A country founded to keep people out of debtors prison now puts people in jail for not paying taxes!

Yet at the same time, the informed minority has not paid a dime of taxes for years. It's not who you know, it's what you know about the laws. As an example, you'll be shown: HOW TO PROTECT ALL YOUR ASSETS FROM THE IRS AND MAKE CERTAIN THEY CAN NEVER TAKE ANYTHING FROM YOU.

Lawyers usually charge from $15,000 to $20,000 for the very same advice. Now you can know how to totally and legally protect your assets from anyone, even the IRS. What does this mean? It means you call save thousands in insurance, thousands in lawyer bills, and sleep in total comfort knowing that assets can't be re-possessed or stolen from you with the sweep of a pen, by the IRS or anyone else!

The book only costs $49.95, plus $2.95 shipping and handling. You'll be proud to own this 128 page hard bound, gold embossed book with over 300 legal cases cited. This is a real book, not a notebook printed on a copy machine!

AN OFFER ONLY A FOOL COULD REFUSE? Your check won't be cashed unless you are 100% pleased.

Send your check today for HOW TO GET THE IRS OUT OF YOUR LIFE. But post date it 30 days from today. That's because we will hold your check in a locked safe until that date. That's right, we will not deposit your check until then. That means you can read the book in full, thoroughly digest each tactic and legal case. After 30 days, if we have not heard from you, only then will we deposit your check. There is no risk in this offer for you. None.

A Remarkable Double Your Money Back Guarantee. We guarantee that every word in this ad is true and legally correct. If you can show otherwise, we will gladly refund twice your entire purchase price, in full, including shipping and handling charges! That's how confident we are of the material and approach. Order now.

DID YOU KNOW?

The Lazarus[1] Republic

Under a planetary alignment not seen in 300,000 years, Texans are making history. Aided by the Divine and by concerned Americans on the Internet, Ambassador and Chief Foreign Legal Officer Richard McLaren and members of the provisional government have resurrected the Republic of Texas from a tomb of legal chicanery.[2]

As noted in our last issue, Tim McMahon, secretary of judicial affairs for the republic, served notice January 16 on a representative of Governor George W. Bush that the State of Texas has no basis in law and that Bush would need to find other employment. Accompanying McMahon was his father, the sheriff of Gonzalez county. Bush's own father, the former U.S. president, reportedly stormed into his son's office later, slamming the door and shouting, "What the hell did you accept the paperwork for?!"

On February 17, citizens of the republic gathered in Houston, voting to seat their first lawful grand jury. Two days later—while others celebrated 150 years of "statehood" at the capitol—on the lawn of nearby Travis county courthouse citizens of the republic remembered 150 years of foreign [read: U.S.] occupation by drawing 100 names for the jury pool.

February 26, an interracial, intercultural grand jury was seated to hear testimony and view evidence for the People of the Republic of Texas versus the agents of their oppression: the United States, Inc. and its military-occupation government, the State of Texas.

The jury then took the oath along with the presenters, Ambassador McLaren, appointed Special Prosecutor Dan Meador and Lindsey Springer, his associate. Charged to investigate the allegations and evidence presented, the jury saw certified documents that the republic had been defrauded out of its lawful right to property and its very existence.

Confronted with irrefutable evidence and compelling testimony, the jury struggled to keep in mind the guidance provided by Jeffrey Thayer, a common-law, guild lawyer in the Austin township[3]—to follow Biblical precepts and forgive rather than seek revenge.

Fulfilling its mandate from the citizens of the republic, the jury made its decisions: first, that no further investigation was required; then, to return three indictments. In one, David Robinson, assistant commissioner for international affairs for the Internal Revenue Service, was noticed that the IRS and other agencies of the U.S. Treasury Department (including Secret Service and BATF) have 30 days to cease all operations against Texans and vacate Texas soil.

Henry Pope, Chief Justice of the U.S. Fifth District Court of Appeals, has 30 days to close all of its military courts in Texas and turn them over the lawful body of the Republic of Texas to establish courts based on the common law of America.

Since Governor Bush had already been noticed to leave office, the third indictment gave him and his "outlaw government of the State of Texas" just five days to move into transition mode with the provisional government: Step aside and vacate or face the consequences in the first certified citizen's common-law court in Tarrant county.

On March 14, officers of the republic issued an open invitation to all Texas law-enforcement officers—Texas Rangers, Department of Public Safety, Texas Guard, Texas National Guard, sheriffs and municipal police—to begin talks with its members.

The same day, the media was informed that the next Monday, the indictments would be served by officers of the republic on the IRS, the governor and, by a special envoy, on the U.S. Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals in Louisiana. That Monday, more than 1,000 people walked to the IRS building, including citizens who joined the throng as it passed through the streets. The militia was requested to wear civilian dress so as to pose no threat to State of Texas employees.

At the capitol building, officers of the republic were met by Capt. Charles Smith, in charge of the Texas Department of Safety, Capitol Division. Officers of the republic served the indictment in accordance with the law of nations: Since the State of Texas has defaulted on the quo warranto ("what authority (do you have)?") writ, they went to repossess the property of the republic. Invited to become a trustee of the republic so that he and his force could be trusted with its assets, including the capitol building, Smith agreed happily.

Since the assets of the State of Texas, Inc. are locked up in international, common-law commercial liens, something has to give soon. Indicating that they may be willing to work with the common-law court, State of Texas district attorneys, judges and other courts have inquired about its procedures and whether it is open to all people, races and creeds.

Hoping to facilitate a peaceful transition to lawful rule, the republic's secretary of defense Archie Lowe is personally contacting the sheriffs of all 254 counties of the republic and is being well received. He is also working with Houston militia commander and radio talk-show host Johnny Johnson to develop a radio station.

Send your prayers and support to the Republic of Texas, P.O. Box 460554, San Antonio, TPZ (Texas Postal Zone) 78246, Republic of Texas. http://www.flash.net/~robertk or email lucy@txdirect.net.
